A Great Battle Fought Near Chattanooga.

The Engagement of a Desperate Character.

Fierce Dashes on Our Left and Centre.

THE ENEMY FINALLY REPULSED.

Our Lines Re-established as Before the Fight.

THE LOSS IN WOUNDED HEAVY.

Official Statement from General Rosecrans.

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY OF THE CUMBERLAND, CRAWFISH SPRINGS, GA., Sept. 19.

A desperate engagement commenced this morning at 11 o'clock.

The rebels made a heavy attack on the corps of Gen. THOMAS, forming the left wing of our army, and at the same time they attacked the right wing, which was thought to be a feint.

Gen. McCOOK's and Gen. CRITTENDEN's troops were thrown into the engagement as convenience offered, the main portions of their forces being on the march at the time.

The fight on the left was of a very desperate character. The enemy were repulsed, but, on being re-inforced, regained their position, from which they were subsequently driven, after a severe engagement of an hour and a half.

Gen. THOMAS' forces then charged the rebels for nearly a mile and a half, punishing them badly.

About two o'clock in the afternoon the rebels made a fierce dash on our centre, composed of the divisions of Gens. VAN CLEVE and REYNOLDS.

Gen. VAN CLEVE's forces were struck on the right flank, and being vigorously pushed by the rebels fell back, until Gen. CRITTENDEN's line was broken and the troops became much scattered.

Gen. THOMAS on the left, and Gen. DAVIS on the right, then pushed forward their forces vigorously toward the gap, and, after a hard fight, recovered the ground which had been lost on the extreme right.

The fight disclosed the intention of the rebels, which evidently was to get between us and Chattanooga.

The general engagement, which commenced at 11 A. M., ended about 6 P. M.

Gen. PALMER, who had gathered together our scattered forces, and Gen. NEGLEY, who had been sent from the right flank to feel the centre, pushed forward, and reestablished our line as it had been before the battle began, along the Chickamauga Creek.

The country where the battle was fought is level, but thickly overgrown with small timber and brushwood, and is very unfavorable for the use of artillery, very little of which was used.

The casualties in wounded are heavy, but extremely light in killed for so heavy a musketry engagement.

The fight on the left was one continuous roll of musketry for an hour or more.

No general officers were injured.

Col. HEG and Col. BRADLEY, commanding brigades, were wounded.

Col. JONES, of the Thirty-sixth Ohio regiment, and Col. GARRETT and Maj. VARNELLA, of the Tenth Indiana regiment, were also wounded.

Lieut. JONES, of Company A, Tenth Indiana regiment, was killed.

Lieut.-Col. HUNT, of the Fortieth Kentucky regiment and Col. MAXWELL, of the Second Ohio regiment, were wounded.

Lieut. DRAKAW and Lieut. LUNLOW, Lieut. FRANKLIN of battery H, Fifth artillery, were wounded.

Lieut. FLOYD, of battery I, Fourth artillery, and Capt. BROWN, of the Thirty-first Illinois regiment, wounded.

Capt. SEARLES, Assistant Adjutant-General, of STARKWEATHER's brigade, was killed.

Battery H, of the Fifth artillery, was lost, and afterward recaptured by the Seventy-ninth Indiana regiment.

The battle is not yet over. It will probably be renewed to-morrow.

Rebel prisoners taken represent that the corps of Gens. HILL, PERZ, JOHNSON and LONGSTREET, were in the engagement.

Our men are in the best of spirits, and eager to begin anew.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, Sept. 20.

ROSECRANS, in a dispatch to HALLECK, says: "In the early part of the fight the rebels drove us some distance, capturing seven guns. Later in the action, however, we drove the enemy, reoccupying all our last ground and capturing ten pieces of artillery. A number of prisoners, representing forty-five regiments, were captured by our forces." The battle was probably renewed yesterday morning.

From Mexico and Japan.

SAN FRANCISCO, Saturday, Sept. 19.

The steamer Golden Age arrived last night with dates from the City of Mexico, via Acapulco, to Aug. 10 only (!)

The substance of the news is, that the guerrillas, who occupied the main roads to the capital, had captured several French trains, causing much suffering from scarcity of provisions. Communication with Vera Cruz was constantly interrupted. The guerrillas occupied Jalapa and Orizaba.

SALDENY, the French Minister, had been poisoned and was dangerously ill in consequence.

The ship John Kay has arrived from Kanagawa, Aug. 10.

Japan continued unquiet. A British fleet of twelve vessels had sailed for the western shores of Japan, to finish the punishment of the Daimios, who had recently been taken to task by the American and French men-of-war.

THE EXPEDITION TO TEXAS.

Naval Battle at Sabine Pass—Three Gunboats Engaged.

TREMENDOUS BOMBARDMENT.

TWO UNION GUNBOATS DISABLED.

Desperate Fight and Slaughter of the Enemy.

Gallant Conduct of Capts. Crocker and Johnson.

From Our Special Correspondent.

NEW-ORLEANS, Saturday, Sept. 12, 1863.

I told you in my recent letters that a military expedition, on an important scale, was on the tapis. As the movement has taken place, and results are now matters of public notoriety, I shall endeavor to give a clear account of all that transpired. Expecting to join the expedition at a later period with the Commanding-General of this Department, I did not go forward with the advance, and therefore, send you the account of another eye-witness, which is pronounced very accurate by all the officers with whom I have conversed.

DESTINATION OF THE EXPEDITION.

So carefully had matters been kept secret, that it was not until the transports had left, crowded with troops, and far toward their destination, that the truth began to leak out that the expedition was directed toward the mouth of the Sabine River; the dividing line between the States of Texas and Louisiana. We had plenty of force, the troops were in exuberant spirits, and everything promised success. But unfortunately we were not sufficiently informed of the local difficulties of the place we had to reduce. Like at Vicksburgh, Port Hudson, Sebastopol, and many other places to be attacked, we had to feel our way, and I am sorry to say it cost us something in valuable lives and property; but no more to effect us—as to the ultimate result—than a rain-drop effects the duck on which it falls.

On arriving at the spot on which our troops were destined to land, it was soon found to be impossible to attempt anything of the kind, owing to the marshy nature of the ground and the excessively shallow water. It soon, therefore, became evident that upon our gunboats would devolve the whole task of attacking; and gallantly did some of them go into an engagement, that is pronounced by all who saw it, one of the most desperately contested of the whole war.

THE NAVAL ACTION.

The attack was commenced about half-past 3 o'clock on the afternoon of the 8th, by the gunboat Clifton, Capt. CROCKER commanding, carrying nine heavy guns, two of which—one at the bow, and the other at the stern—were 9-inch pivots.

Capt. CROCKER opened fire at a distance of about two miles from his bow pivot, and after an experimental shot or two, acquired the range, pouring in upon the enemy a continuous stream of fire, the bursting shells knocking huge holes in their works, and throwing the debris up in enormous quantities. The reports of the huge monster was absolutely deafening, and the ground fairly shook from the concussion.

The Sachem, Capt. JOHNSON commanding, in the meantime took up a position where she could pour a raking cross-fire, and also opened with her broadside of rifled pieces, which were served with equal precision and effect.

About the same time the powerful battery of the Arizona, Capt. TESSETS, from a position at the stern of the Sachem, also opened upon the enemy with screaming shell and hissing round shot,—every one of which could be plainly seen plowing up the interior of the fort and crashing through the breastworks.

This continued for some time before the enemy replied, the ships gradually nearing the fort and increasing the rapidity of their fire, until they were within point-blank range, and the Sachem had nearly passed by the works—on the right hand side of the oyster reefs fronting them,—when the enemy suddenly opened a terrific fire from his entire battery.

THE REBEL WORKS.

The fort is situated some distance below Sabine City—as shown by the map I send you. The first and main work consisted of a powerful earthwork of great length, mounted with six heavy guns, and garrisoned by a large number of men. To the left of this was a second work of similar character, mounting from three to five heavy guns, one or more of which was rifled. In addition to these two forts, the enemy had in sight, and rendering valuable assistance to the defence, three large cotton-clad river steamers, armed with one or more guns, and a schooner armed with one bow gun—probably of very large calibre, as she lay off at a distance of over two miles, and deliberately fired at the approaching fleet.

The firing now continued hot and fierce, the enemy's shot being generally aimed too high, passing over the tops of the vessels and striking in the water beyond them; while, on the other hand, nearly all the shots from the vessels were effective, scarching every portion of the larger work, and, at times, with such effect that every man was driven from the guns.

AN ACCIDENT AND ITS RESULTS.

But just at this moment, when everything appeared most favorable, and the fortunes of war seemed about to assign the meed of victory to the gallant little vessels, the Sachem unfortunately grounded, broadside on, exposing her most vulnerable part to the concentrated fire of the enemy's largest work, the steamers and the sailing craft.

FURIOUS BATTLE OF THE GUNBOATS.

This was speedily taken advantage of by them, and a perfect storm of shot and shell fell upon, over, and around her, making the water hiss and foam like a boiling cauldron. Soon a heavy rifled shot struck her fair in the side, crushing in the iron-plating and wood-work, and, striking her machinery, exploded her steam chest, filling the vessel with the scalding vapor and leaving her a helpless wreck, with no hope of getting off the shore. Poor little Sachem!—a sturdier craft never floated on the water nor a bolder man than her commander Johnson. We all remember the noble part she took in the affair at Galveston; one of the few bright spots in that otherwise dark and hideous piece of business.

The enemy now ceased their fire on the Sachem and turned their attention to the remaining two boats; the crews of which, realizing the position of their brave comrades, redoubled their exertions.

The Arizona, unfortunately, drew too much water to get to close quarters, and it devolved upon the Clifton alone to undertake the perilous task of silencing the works—a task that might have daunted the stoutest hearts.

But the Clifton was manned by brave men, and most nobly did the gallant CROCKER and his crew respond to the call upon them. Putting on a full head of steam, the devoted little craft ran down directly toward the largest fort, keeping up a hot fire all the time from her pivot guns, and as she neared the works, loading with double charges of grape, sweeping the parapet at every discharge.

The Clifton had now approached to within about 500 yards, and after giving the enemy a last discharge of grape from her pivot, attempted to throw her bow around, and take up a broadside position. But she had gone a few yards too near, and as she slightly swung around, her bow struck,—the velocity with which she was running driving her far upon the shore. She instantly commenced backing, keeping up a constant fire from her bow and port broadside guns, the former keeping the main parapet entirely clear of the enemy, while the latter played on the second battery.

This continued for some time, and faint hopes were entertained that the gallant Captain would succeed in extricating his boat from her terrible position. But this was not to be; for, at last, a shot from the battery at the left penetrated her boiler, in an instant reducing her to the same condition as the Sachem.

THE BATTLE ENDS.

The battle was now, to all intents and purposes, ended. Further resistance seemed utterly hopeless, but still the brave CROCKER could not endure the idea of giving up his vessel, and ordered his men to fight on. Without his knowledge, however, some party struck the white flag, and the enemy instantly ceased firing.

When informed of this, the Captain ordered the deck to be cleared, and, loading the after pivot-gun with a 9-inch solid shot, he fired it through the centre of the ship, from stem to stern, tearing the machinery in pieces, and rendering it utterly worthless to the enemy. After doing this, and spiking all the guns, the Clifton surrendered.

The remaining gunboat, the Arizona, quite unable to cope single-handed with the enemy, and drawing too much water to engage them in close quarters, reluctantly withdrew from the unequal contest, firing a farewell shot of defiance, as she steamed slowly down the bay, the enemy not replying to her challenge.

The Clifton had on board, beside her regular crew of one hundred and ten men, seventy-five sharpshooters; and the Sachem thirty sharpshooters—all of whom were captured, with the exception of seven men from the Clifton, who swam ashore, ran down the beach, and were taken off by a small boat.

The loss of the armament of the Clifton is unquestionably a serious one; her powerful battery of rifled guns being one of the most effective in the service. The boats, however, are so much damaged that the guns, to be of any service to the enemy, will have to be removed from them and remounted, and consequently it will be a long time before they can be made available.

The amount of killed and wounded I have not been able to ascertain, though they are not supposed to be heavy. I am happy to add that Capts. CROCKER and JOHNSON are neither thought to have been killed or wounded, but both prisoners.

A great deal will, no doubt, be attempted to be made out of this temporary check to our proceedings, but that will avail the enemy little. As we have shown them, upon many former occasions, all we require to know is what we actually have to contend with and then the difficulty is overcome. As the London Daily News very shrewdly remarks: We have now settled down into that passive, determined mood of warfare when we can neither be elated by petty successes, nor depressed by petty reverses. Our army and navy are safe and sound. They are composed of men of the right sort, and you may depend upon soon hearing of their paying back, with interest, this little affair of the Clifton and the Sachem.

ARMY OF THE POTOMAC.

The Late Cavalry Fight.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

CULPEPPER COURT-HOUSE, Va., Tuesday, Sept. 15, 1863.

On the morning of the 13th the cavalry division of Gen. KILPATRICK crossed the Rappahannock at Kelly's Ford, and marched in the direction of Culpepper by Brandy Station. No rebels in force were encountered until reaching Brandy Station, where the advance, consisting of the Harris Light, or Second New-York, met them in some force. A brisk skirmish ensued, the rebels, however, immediately falling back toward Culpepper. At this place the division of KILPATRICK formed a junction with the divisions of BUFORD and GREGG, the whole under command of Gen. PLEASANTON. The whole corps advanced up the railroad toward Culpepper. Gen. KILPATRICK had the left, resting on the left of the railroad; Gen. BUFORD the centre, and Gen. GREGG the right—the skirmishing and cannonading becoming quite sharp as we advanced. As the cavalry moved across the plain in perfect order, some of the regiments in line, some in column, and a long line of skirmishers in front, with the batteries a little to the rear, the respective division and brigade commanders moving up with their Staffs, it presented one of the most brilliant spectacles of the war. The rebels did not make much resistance until we reached a point about one mile this side of Culpepper, where they opened three batteries upon KILPATRICK's division, but not checking the advance in the least. On approaching near the town, the rebels seemed disposed to dispute our further advance. A long line of dismounted infantry could be seen along a fence just across a deep creek, with two batteries in support. Gen. KILPATRICK ordered Gen. CUSTER to dislodge them, which he soon accomplished. The Sixth Michigan dismounted and engaged the rebel skirmishers, and soon routed them in good style. The Harris Light charged the battery on the edge of the town, capturing two guns. This brought the division of KILPATRICK to the edge of the town. BUFORD and GREGG were driving the enemy on the right, and Gen. KILPATRICK, with characteristic boldness, was about to charge the whole rebel force upon our left, and capture the train of cars that was moving off toward Orange, but was prevented by the unexpected discovery of a deep creek which was only passable at one place in his front. This enabled the train to escape, affording time to the rebel cavalry to take up a strong position, a little to the rear of the town, in the woods on the Cedar Mountain road. In the meantime, Gen. CUSTER at the head of the First battalion of the First Vermont, commanded by Major WELLS, dashed into town, driving the rebels out and capturing one piece of artillery to the right of the town. The rebels had two other pieces in the woods to the rear of the town, strongly supported by a strong force of cavalry. The Harris Light gallantly charged up into the woods where the rebels were posted, but were driven back by superior numbers. The First Vermont, consisting of two battalions, numbering about 150 men, under command of Major WELLS, now gallantly advanced to charge under a heavy fire from the enemy's battery. The Harris Light promptly rallied, and both regiments charged into the woods and drove the rebels further toward the Cedar Mountain road. Our loss here was the heaviest of any during the day. Gen. CUSTER, while leading the First Vermont, was wounded in the leg by the bursting of a shell, which also killed his horse, and the Harris Light sustained some loss, the extent of which I have been unable to learn. The rebels now formed just beyond the woods, where they had a battery in position. The Fifth New-York, and one battalion of the First Vermont charged upon the battery, but were repulsed, the rebels returning to the woods in great force, but were driven out the second time, whereupon they retreated for the Rapidan, closely pursued for four miles by Gen. BUFORD, when operations for the day ceased.

Our casualties on this day were three killed and forty wounded. On the 14th the cavalry advanced to the Rapidan, and found the enemy strongly posted at the respective fords on the other side of the river. In the fight the day previous the rebels were commanded by Gen. STUART—his force consisted of FITZHUGH LEE's and WADE HAMPTON's divisions of cavalry and five batteries.

TROOPER.

GEN. BLUNT'S CAMPAIGN.

The War in Western Arkansas and the Indian Country.

REVIEW OF OPERATIONS.

THE ENTIRE REGION RECLAIMED.

A LOYAL FEELING DOMINANT.

FACTS CONCERNING THE INDIANS.

From Our Own Correspondent.

LEAVENWORTH, KAN., Tuesday, Sept. 15, 1863.

By the arrival of messengers from Gen. BLUNT's headquarters at Fort Smith, Arkansas, we have confirmation most certain of the complete evacuation of the Indian Territory by the rebel forces. This gratifying result has been gained with but trifling loss on our part, and the complete disorder of the rebels.

Since the 5th of July last—a little over two months—when everything looked gloomy and disheartening in the Indian Territory, Gen. BLUNT has, with a force never exceeding 4,000 effective men, defeated and routed completely (both demoralizing and demobilizing) a rebel force doubling and trebling his own in strength. It may be that the comparative isolation of his field of operations, and the absorbing interest of the contest at other points, have engrossed the public attention, but certain it is that the movements of Gen. BLUNT have rarely received that notice they deserve. A brief résumé will show this.

When Gen. BLUNT assumed command of the District of the Frontier in the latter part of June, he had a force—whites, Indians and negroes included—of not more than 3,000 men. That force, by the addition of the Thirteenth Kansas and some cavalry, was raised to 4,000. At Fort Gibson on the Arkansas, 169 miles south from Fort Scott, Col. PHILLIPS, with three regiments of indifferent and partially disorganized Indians, a four-gun battery, and a few companies of nearly dismounted cavalry, had for four months been facing an enemy numbering not less than 7,000 men, who, if their leaders had had one tithe of the pluck of PHILLIPS, could at any time have "gobbled up" his entire force. There is not in the annals of this war a more striking example of tenacity and daring courage than that displayed by Col. PHILLIPS in so unflinchingly obeying the instructions of Gen. BLUNT and holding the Cherokee Territory, and thereby keeping Southern Kansas and Missouri from again being overrun.

Gen. BLUNT immediately pressed forward what troops he could gather, taking even the poorly armed and undrilled recruits just raised for the Fourteenth Kansas cavalry. Fortunately the Third Wisconsin cavalry, under Maj. CALKINS, was ordered to rendezvous at Fort Scott, with the intention of leaving the District. The emergency warranting it, Gen. BLUNT sent it to the field. Here commenced the rebel defeats. On the 1st and 2d of July, Col. WILLIAMS, of the First Kansas colored regiment, commanding escort, had severe engagements with the rebels under STAND WATIE, who with a superior force was strongly posted at Cabin Creek. The rebels were defeated and driven off in utter rout. BLUNT reached Fort Gibson on the 11th of July, and on the 15th, with 2,500 men, crossed the Arkansas, himself making a detour with cavalry, fifty miles, to outflank the enemy's advance, which he succeeded in doing, and on the morning of the 17th attacked the rebel COOPER, having a force of nearly 6,000, in a strong position. The rebels were badly beaten, losing 150 killed, 300 wounded, and 100 prisoners, with two guns, a flag, 500 stand of arms, and a lot of stores, etc.

On the 20th the rebels were largely reinforced, and numbering nearly 12,000, again advanced to Honey Springs, their pickets occupying the south bank of the Arkansas, and menaced Gen. BLUNT in rather formidable style. The latter, knowing that some reinforcements were on the way from Fort Scott, determined on their arrival to again attack the enemy.

Fortunately, while waiting for his own reinforcements, Col. CLOUD, Second Kansas, commanding a brigade, was moving to his assistance via Fayetteville, Ark. All having arrived, Gen. BLUNT, on the 22d of August, crossed the river, and moved upon the enemy. Though Gen. SCULL had at least 7,000 white troops, beside Indians, he had fallen back to Briar Town, North Fork, Canadian River, Creek Nation, fifty miles southeast of Fort Gibson. On hearing of BLUNT's movement he fled in haste to Perryville, south of the Canadian River, in the Choctaw Nation, not more than 50 miles from the Red River of Texas. Gen. BLUNT pressed on, in hot haste, with his cavalry, on the 26th ult., making, in one day, a march of 50 miles, surprising and capturing a strong rear-guard, and destroying all of SCULL's and COOPER's stores. The enemy had already broken in different bodies, and were fleeing in disorder, SCULL was fleeing with a portion of his army in the direction of Boggy Depot, 60 miles southwest of Perryville, about 18 miles from the Red River, and within a few miles of Fort McCullough, the only point left the Confederates in the entire Indian Territory.

The Creek regiments, (rebel,) under CHILI and UWI MCINTOSH, retreated by way of North Fork Town. Gen. BLUNT, understanding their desire to return to allegiance, sent Col. JUNSON and the First brigade to bring them. This was successfully accomplished, and the restoration of the Creek Nation to the National Government is now assured. The laying down of their arms on the part of the followers of the Creek Chief, CHILI and UWI MCINTOSH assures peace, because it heals a feud of thirty-five years' standing, which has more to do with the Indians espousing Slavery and the rebellion than a direct interest therein.

COOPER, TANDY WALKER (Choctaws,) and STAND WATIE (Cherokee,) fled directly south to the Red River, notifying the Indians that they must abandon their country, or be treated by the rebels as enemies. The result of this notification was to induce the Choctaws to report to Col. CLOUD in bodies, asking protection.

Gen. BLUNT returned to Briar Town with the Second and Third brigades. The Second brigade, under Col. BOWEN, Thirteenth Kansas, was sent to Webber's Falls, about half-way between Forts Smith and Gibson. With the Third brigade, Col. CLOUD, Gen. BLUNT pushed after CANRIL, who was moving on to Fort Smith. CANRIL was met with 3,000 or 4,000 men, twelve miles from the fort. It was night, and our troops camped two miles from him. CANRIL left in the night. Col. CLOUD, with his own regiment, Capt. CRAWFORD commanding, the First Arkansas cavalry, and RABB's battery, pushed after CANRIL, who was traveling southward. CLOUD chased him fifteen or twenty miles, and had a brief engagement. The enemy fled in disorder, after a few rounds. Capt. EB. LEWIS, of the Second Kansas, was killed by an ambush, as was also SINCLAIR, one of Gen. BLUNT's scouts. Pushing on with the rest of the brigade, the General had in the meantime entered the fort and hoisted the flag, which Capt. BRYANT (now General) removed when he evacuated that post in June, 1861.

This is a hasty résumé of the last campaign of Gen. BLUNT, one whose results for the peace and security of the Southwest, and in the territorial area of the region restored to the National Government, will be found to be of very great, though not of as paramount importance as other campaigns in the Mississippi Valley or the Western slopes of the Appalachian range, under GRANT, BANKS, ROSECRANS and BURNSIDE. It has been made against the opposition, not only of a Department Commander, but also that from a powerful politico-speculative combination interested in preventing the return of the 10,000 loyal Indians who were being fed as refugees in Kansas. With miserably meagre forces, a long line of communication, indifferently guarded, a foe largely outnumbering his own forces, Gen. BLUNT has within two months advanced the National lines southward two hundred miles to the border of Texas. He has restored Western Arkansas as well as the Indian Nations. A brief historical summary will best illustrate the value of the work done by his gallant army.

Fort Smith is in Sebastian County, Arkansas, on the Arkansas, at the mouth of the Poteau River, one hundred and sixty-five miles west by north of Little Rock. It is a place of great importance to the rebels. Gen. BLUNT found here an extensive cartridge factory, as also other works. The post buildings are fine, and cost the United States Government $300,000. The centre of the pickets on which they are built is inclosed by a heavy stone wall, ditched and strengthened by earthwork. Fort Smith is the head of navigation on the Arkansas. Gibson is 60 miles west by land and 150 by water. The trade of Fort Smith is large, and as a military position and depot it was and is the controlling point on the Southwest Border. It was here that Ben McCULLOCH assembled the army which cooperated with PRICE in the campaign that culminated at Springfield, Mo.

It is a well known fact that the people of Western Arkansas were at first strongly opposed to secession. A meeting held at Van Buren on the 16th of January, 1861, opposed it and declared that the election of LINCOLN was not sufficient cause for separation. The vote upon calling a convention to consider the question of secession stood 27,412 for, and 15,826 against. Nine-tenths of the latter votes were cast west of Little Rock. The vote on delegates stood; Union, 24,621; Secession, 17,027. While the convention was in session a test vote resulted, 39 against secession and 30 for. Salutes were fired both at Fort Smith and Van Buren in honor of the thirty-nine Union votes. Under the excitement of Sumter the ordinance of secession was passed. The Union feeling has always remained strong. Gen. BLUNT and Col. PHILLIPS raised three regiments in the northwestern counties, and in Scott County there has been a Union guerrilla force of 200 for some months past. The presence of Gen. BLUNT's army, and the movements of DAVIDSON and SCULL will insure success. Western Arkansas certainly, and probably the entire State, will soon be applying, with loyal officers, for restoration to its old rank in the Federal Union.

The extent of the Indian Territory may be readily seen when it is known that it extends east and west from the Arkansas west line to the east line of New-Mexico, a distance of 500 miles; and from Kansas to Texas, north and south, about 250 miles. It is watered by the Arkansas, Canadian and Red Rivers, and by a number of important minor streams, such as the Illinois, Neosho and Verdigris. It is in the same latitude as Southern Tennessee and Northern Mississippi and Alabama, a region admirably for cereal grains, fruits, cotton, tobacco, and other Southern staples. It was, previous to the war, one of the great grazing regions of the West.

There is a present population (Indian) of 65,000; whites, 1,000; slaves, 7,300, (according to census of 1860, but according to present state of affairs, not more than half of that number.) These slaves were divided: Cherokees, 2,504; Creeks, 1,651; Chickasaws, 917; Choctaws, 2,394. The Seminoles owned no slaves, and but eight whites were resident in the nation. As a consequence, they were all loyal, except about 50 bribed by PIKE. Of the 75,000 living in the Indian Territory, at least 65,000 are more civilized than their neighbors of Arkansas, Missouri and Texas. The Choctaws were large cotton planters, some raising their 600 to 800 bales of cotton annually.

That the restoration of this Territory is complete, a glance at some facts in the history of the Indian nations will show. I mentioned the return to allegiance of the Creeks under CHILI and UWI MCINTOSH. These are the sons of the Agent, MCINTOSH, who was engaged in the Creek war with JACKSON in 1813, and who, in 1825, was murdered by the tribe for alleged treachery in ceding their lands by treaty to the United States. They had lived in Georgia, and in 1832 were finally removed to their present location. Out of the fraudulent treaty of MCINTOSH grew factions which have had more to do with the divisions of rebel and loyal than those sentiments themselves. It is curious to see how Slavery has tied itself to one side and embittered the quarrel. The MCINTOSHES lead, or led the half-breed, Slavery propaganda as well as pro-treaty party. OTOOHLLYAHOLO, a large slaveholder, led the anti-treaty party. This party are now in favor of abolishing Slavery.

A similar quarrel, even more bitter, has existed among the Cherokee Creeks. Agent MCINTOSH seems to have been a useful tool of the Southern party. We early find him trying to bribe JOHN ROSS, in 1817-18. ROSS, or KOOWESCOOWE, is the son of a Scotch trader and half-breed woman. He, like all the leaders of these nations, has received some education, and is a man of considerable ability. He was opposed to ceding the lands of his people, which were then part of the State of Georgia. In 1829, he, as agent of his nation, appealed from the State Legislature to the Supreme Court of the United States. In this he was successful. A series of aggressions was continued by the Georgians till 1835, when the Cherokee agent, J. F. SCHREVERSOON, with Major RINES, JOHN RINES and BOUNINE, with 500 other Indians, entered into a treaty for the cession of their lands. JOHN ROSS and 15,000 protested against this fraud, known as the treaty of New-Echota. The Government, however, insisted on its provisions, and Gen. SCOTT was sent with a force to enforce the same. The Cherokees removed West. The RINES and BOUNINE were put to death by the nation. This treaty was the cause of the bitterest feud existing among the nations. STAND WATIE is the leader of the Ridge party. His defeat and flight will heal the divisions among the Cherokees, and cement them all as a loyal people. Their Legislature not only abolished Slavery, but made the negroes citizens.

It is a curious speculation to know what will be the future of these nations. It cannot be possible to retain them in isolation much longer. Wealthy, well educated, with large tribal, territorial and monetary possessions, and a population that, with the proposed removal of Kansas Indians to that Territory, will reach an 100,000, why is it not possible to organize a Territorial Government and let them be represented in Congress? It is certainly necessary for the security of this region that a form of Government under the direct control of the National authorities should be adopted, in place of the present loose tribal systems. This country is now in a condition to be administered into order and security. Well organized, with officers from among those who have led and are trusted by them, such a Territory would strengthen as greatly in the Southwest, and pave the way for a new Free State. We certainly can no more object to an Indian than a Mexican State, such as New-Mexico will make when it shall enter the Union. ALFREDO PIKE, acting as Confederate Commissioner, held out, as one of the inducements for these Nations to go with the South, that they should have a delegate in the Confederate Congress to represent their interests. Certain it is that a Territorial Government would be the best method of educating them out of their present abnormal condition into that normal one of citizenship.

BAD NEWS FROM ROSECRANS.

Defeat of Our Army in Georgia.

ITS RETREAT TO CHATTANOOGA.

NO DETAILS.

We have the following brief and very painful news from Gen. ROSECRANS' army. The occupation of the telegraph lines for military purposes prevents, for the present, the transmission of details:

LOUISVILLE, Monday, Sept. 21—12:40 A. M.

Our army under Gen. ROSECRANS has been badly beaten, and compelled to retreat to Chattanooga, by BRAGG, with heavy reinforcements from LEE, BEAUREGARD and JOE JOHNSTON.

RUMORS.

LOUISVILLE, Sunday, Sept. 20.

All kinds of exciting rumors are prevalent here, some of them quite adverse to ROSECRANS' army. The military authorities have the line, and there is very little prospect of getting anything through to-night.

INTERESTING FROM KEY WEST.

No Symptoms of Yellow Fever—Few Vessels in Port—A Self-Sacrificing Surgeon.

Special Correspondence of the New-York Times.

KEY WEST, Monday, Sept. 14, 1863.

Our island has for the last two weeks undergone a period of unusual quietness and repose, resulting mainly from apprehension felt abroad concerning the health of the town, and more particularly as to yellow fever. Steamers pass by us both ways with no more of ceremony or notice than occasionally to stop at Sand Key and leave us a mail. And yet for all this apprehension there has not thus far this season been the slightest real cause, for our town never was more healthy at any season than it is now, and has been all Summer. In fact, we never have the fever here two successive years for palpable reasons. During the season of scourge, every person becomes sensitive on the matter, and the ensuing season every precaution is taken to ward it off. The police of the city is made thorough and complete. Quarantine regulations are rigidly enforced, and observed with willingness, and generally care is taken in all ways to do or avoid doing those things that are calculated to contribute to its introduction.

I noticed, in your number of the 10th ult., an account of the sadly destructive fever on the United States steamer Alabama, where it was stated that it was uncertain whether it was contracted at Havana or Key West. When we consider that there has been no case of fever in our harbor or on the island during this whole year thus far, we are undoubtedly safe in concluding that the seeds of disease were obtained at Havana, where the steamer stopped previous to her arrival here.

Our harbor is now quite bare of vessels, the only war vessels being the steamer Tahoma and ship Dale, with the small captured prize steamer Neptune, just arrived. The San Jacinto has gone on a cruise, the De Soto gone to the Mississippi, taking under convoy her prize, the steamer Alice Vivian, sent to New-Orleans for sale. She is a large river steamer about 450 tons burden, and appraised at $30,000, and the cargo which has been sent to New-York, consisting of 550 bales cotton, 36 barrels resin and turpentine, appraised at $177,103 50.

We have had very few prizes brought in here recently, probably owing to there being no Judge of the Court here at present, and that there is now a regular Prize Court at New-Orleans. It is hoped that the newly-appointed Judge for this place will present himself at an early day, as there is now very slight cause for any apprehension in regard to epidemic.

The naval coal depot, which has just been finished here at large expense to the Government, was last week partially filled up with 1,500 tons of coal, when the foundation commenced to settle and the centre column supporting the railroad and roof went down about ten inches, when they hurried the coal out again, and now the building must be appropriated for some other purpose. It is very well calculated for storage of provisions, clothing, materials, &c. The foundation is a sand bank, and the walls were sunk about ten feet below the surface by building coffer-dams, yet they are not equal to the immense weight.

Among the very many cases of self-sacrifice and devotion to country which this war has presented, there is none more deserving of notice than that of Dr. THOMAS MCHENRY, of Chester County, Penn., Acting Assistant Surgeon in our Navy, who died in this city last month. Dr. MCHENRY arrived here in August, 1862, in the height of the yellow fever season, when strong men were prostrated and carried to their final home in twenty-four hours. He was at once ordered to duty on the steamer Huntsville, where his first visit was greeted with the corpses of two young officers of that ship, Surgeon and Paymaster, who had died the previous day. Several of the crew were down with the fever; and amidst this did this young man devote himself to duty as only those do who have offered up their lives on the altar of their country. Much demand was made upon his time by the Fleet Surgeon, Dr. HOMER, on the flagship St. Laurence, where at large number were sick and dying with the fever. His devotion amid these arduous and heavy duties was such that his fellow officers felt compelled to remonstrate with him and require that he should take more care of himself. Providence spared him through those scenes of death to periods of greater calm and restored health to him. He was subsequently attached to the schooner Wanderer, commanding and retaining the livelies sympathies of his many friends. Of a retiring and modest disposition, he was the true hero, meeting difficulties and dangers with no motive but a discharge of duty. His death occurred at the Naval Hospital, whence his remains were attended to their resting-place by a numerous concourse of his brother officers and his friends.

All Quiet at Knoxville—Severe Frost.

LOUISVILLE, Saturday, Sept. 19.

A dispatch from Gen. BURNSIDE reports all quiet at Knoxville and in that vicinity.

There was an extremely severe frost—the first of the season—last night. There are no reports of its ravages from any distance, but it is feared that all of the tobacco not gathered in is seriously injured, or entirely destroyed.

A Great Battle Fought Near Chattanooga.

The Engagement of a Desperate Character.

THE ENEMY FINALLY REPULSED.

Our Lines Re-established as Before the Fight.

THE LOSS IN WOUNDED HEAVY.

Official Statement from General Rosecrans.

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY OF THE CUMBERLAND, CRAWFISH SPRINGS, GA., Sept. 19.

A desperate engagement commenced this morning at 11 o'clock.

The rebels made a heavy attack on the corps of Gen. THOMAS, forming the left wing of our army, and at the same time they attacked the right wing, which was thought to be a feint.

Gen. McCOOK's and Gen. CRITTENDEN's troops were thrown into the engagement as convenience offered, the main portions of their forces being on the march at the time.

The fight on the left was of a very desperate character. The enemy were repulsed, but, on being reinforced, regained their position, from which they were subsequently driven, after a severe engagement of an hour and a half.

Gen. THOMAS' forces then charged the rebels for nearly a mile and a half, punishing them badly.

About two o'clock in the afternoon the rebels made a fierce dash on our centre, composed of the divisions of Gens. VAN CLEVE and REYNOLDS.

Gen. VAN CLEVE's forces were struck on the right flank, and being vigorously pushed by the rebels fell back, until Gen. CLEBURN's line was broken and the troops became much scattered.

Gen. THOMAS on the left, and Gen. DAVIS on the right, then pushed forward their forces vigorously toward the gap, and, after a hard fight, recovered the ground which had been lost on the extreme right.

The fight disclosed the intention of the rebels, which evidently was to get between us and Chattanooga.

The general engagement, which commenced at 11 A. M., ended about 6 P. M.

Gen. PALMER, who had gathered together our scattered forces, and Gen. NEGLEY, who had been sent from the right flank to join the centre, pushed forward, and reestablished our line as it had been before the battle began, along the Chattanooga Creek.

The country where the battle was fought is level, but thickly overgrown with small timber and brushwood, and is very unfavorable for the use of artillery, very little of which was used.

The casualties in wounded are heavy, but extremely light in killed for so heavy a musketry engagement.

The fight on the left was one continuous roll of musketry for an hour or more.

No general officers were injured.

Colonels WISE and Col. BATELAT commanding brigades, were wounded.

Col. JONES, of the Thirty-sixth Ohio regiment, and Col. CARMIN and Maj. SANFORD, of the Tenth Indiana regiment, were also wounded.

Lieut. JONES, of Company A, Tenth Indiana regiment, was killed.

Lieut. Col. HYER, of the Fortieth Kentucky regiment, and Col. MAXWELL, of the Second Ohio regiment, were wounded.

Lieut. DICKS and Lieut. LEMOW, Lieut. FRANKLIN of battery E, Fifth artillery, were wounded.

Lieut. FISHER, of battery I, Fourth artillery, and Capt. BROWN, of the Thirty-first Illinois regiment, wounded.

Capt. SANFORD, Assistant Adjutant-General, of STARKWEATHER's brigade, was killed.

Battery H, of the Fifth artillery, was lost, and afterward recaptured by the Seventy-ninth Indiana regiment.

The battle is not yet over. It will probably be renewed to-morrow.

Rebel prisoners taken represent that the corps of Gens. HILL, POLK, JOHNSON and LONGSTREET, were in the engagement.

Our men are in the best of spirits, and eager to begin anew.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, Sept. 20.

ROSECRANS, in a dispatch to HALLECK, says: "In the early part of the fight the rebels drove us some distance, capturing some guns. Later in the action, however, we drove the enemy, recovering all our lost ground and capturing ten pieces of artillery. A number of prisoners, representing forty-five regiments, were captured by our forces." The battle was probably renewed yesterday morning.

FROM MEMPHIS.

Duel between Gens. Marmaduke and Walker—Changes in the Rebel Army.

A special dispatch to the Chicago Times, under date of Memphis, Sept. 15, via Cairo, states, upon the authority of a reliable gentleman just from Arkansas, that a duel was fought at Bayou Metaire, Sunday, the 6th instant, between the Confederate Generals MARMADUKE and MARSH WALKER, in which the latter was fatally wounded. The circumstances are these: MARMADUKE until lately, was the ranking officer of his, OGDEN's and WALKER's divisions, stationed at Brownsville, but a commission of Major-General coming on for WALKER, he at once took command by virtue of SEYMOUR, and ordered his troops to fall back on Bayou Metaire, where PRICE was stationed. On falling back MARMADUKE accused WALKER of cowardice, whereupon WALKER challenged him, and they fought with pistols at eight paces. At the first fire Gen. WALKER was shot through the bowels. When he attempted to fall, he (the Tallady fellow) fired two more shots, but it was thought he could survive but a short time. The dreadful ... ness troops, with whom he was a great favorite, are in a terrible state of excitement, and threaten to drive out MARMADUKE and his Missouri troops. The chagrin of MARMADUKE at being ranked by WALKER is said to be the sole cause of the difficulty. I have known Gen. WALKER for years, and know that a braver or more courteous man never lived.

I have just conversed with a gentleman direct from Atlanta, Ga., who states that Gen. JACKSON, formerly Chief of Cavalry on the Staff of Gen. BRAGG, and who succeeded Gen. ROSS' Brigade, composed of all the Confederate cavalry in Eastern Department, Texas, is now, been superseded by Gen. S. D. LEE. The reason is said to be inefficiency and insubordination.

WASHINGTON, Saturday, Sept. 19.

THE EXPEDITION TO TEXAS.

Naval Battle at Sabine Pass—Three Gunboats Engaged.

TREMENDOUS BOMBARDMENT.

TWO UNION GUNBOATS DISABLED.

Desperate Fight and Slaughter of the Enemy.

Gallant Conduct of Capts. Crocker and Johnson.

From Our Special Correspondent.

NEW-ORLEANS, Saturday, Sept. 12, 1863.

I told you in my recent letters that a military expedition, on an important scale, was on the tapis. As the movement has taken place, and results are now matters of public notoriety, I shall endeavor to give a clear account of all that transpired. Expecting to join the expedition at a later period with the Commanding-General of this Department, I did not go forward with the advance, and therefore, send you the account of another eye-witness, which is pronounced very accurate by all the officers with whom I have conversed.

DESTINATION OF THE EXPEDITION.

So carefully had matters been kept secret, that it was not until the transports had left, crowded with troops, and fairly toward their destination (?) the truth began to leak out that the expedition was directed toward the mouth of the Sabine River, the dividing line between the States of Texas and Louisiana. We had plenty of force, the troops were in exuberant spirits, and everything promised success. But unfortunately we were not sufficiently informed of the local difficulties of the place we had to reduce. Like at Vicksburgh, Port Hudson, Sebastopol, and many other places to be attacked, we had to feel our way, and I am sorry to say it cost us something in valuable lives and property; but no more to affect us—as to the ultimate result—than a rain-drop effects the duck on which it falls.

On arriving at the spot on which our troops were destined to land, it was soon found to be impossible to attempt anything of the kind, owing to the marshy nature of the ground and the exceedingly shallow water. It soon, therefore, became evident that upon our gunboats would devolve the whole task of attacking; and gallantly did some of them go into an engagement, that is pronounced by all who saw it, one of the most desperately contested of the whole war.

THE NAVAL ACTION.

The attack was commenced about half-past 3 o'clock on the afternoon of the 8th, by the gunboat Clifton, Capt. CROCKER commanding, carrying nine heavy guns, two of which—one at the bow and the other at the stern—were 9-inch pivots.

Capt. CROCKER opened fire at a distance of about two miles from his bow pivot, and after an experimental shot or two, acquired the range, pouring upon the enemy a continuous stream of fire, the bursting shells knocking huge holes in their works, and throwing the débris up in enormous quantities. The reports of the huge monster was absolutely deafening, and the ground fairly shook from the concussion.

The Sachem, Capt. JOHNSON commanding, in the meantime took up a position where she could pour a raking cross-fire, and also opened with her broadside of rifled pieces, which were served with equal precision and effect.

About the same time the powerful battery of the Arizona, Capt. TINKERS, from a position at the stern of the Sachem, also opened upon the enemy with screaming shell and hissing round shot, every one of which could be plainly seen plowing up the interior of the fort and crashing through the breastworks.

This continued for some time before the enemy replied, the ships gradually nearing the fort and increasing the rapidity of their fire, until they were within point-blank range, and the Sachem had nearly passed by the works on the right hand side of the oyster reefs fronting them, when the enemy suddenly opened a terrible fire from his entire battery.

THE REBEL WORKS.

The fort is situated some distance below Sabine City—as shown by the map I send you. The first and main work consisted of a powerful earthwork of great length, mounted with six heavy guns, and garrisoned by a large number of men. To the left of this was a second work of similar character, mounting from three to five heavy guns, one or more of which was rifled. In addition to these two forts, the enemy had in sight, and rendering valuable assistance to the defence, three large cotton-clad river steamers, armed with one or more guns, and a schooner armed with one bow gun—probably of very large caliber, as she lay off at a distance of over two miles, and deliberately fired at the approaching fleet.

The firing now continued hot and fierce, the enemy's shot being generally aimed too high, passing over the tops of the vessels and striking in the water beyond them; while, on the other hand, nearly all the shots from the vessels were effective, scarching every portion of the larger work, and, at times, with such effect that every man was driven from the guns.

AN ACCIDENT AND ITS RESULTS.

But just at this moment, when everything appeared most favorable, and the fortunes of war seemed about to assign the meed of victory to the gallant little vessels, the Sachem unfortunately grounded, broadside on, exposing her most vulnerable part to the concentrated fire of the enemy's largest work, the steamers and the sailing craft.

FURIOUS BATTLE OF THE GUNBOATS.

This was speedily taken advantage of by them, and a perfect storm of shot and shell fell upon, over, and around her, making the water hiss and foam like a boiling cauldron. Soon a heavy rifled shot struck her fair in the side, crushing in the iron-plating and wood-work, and striking her machinery, exploded her steam chest, filling the vessel with the scalding vapor and leaving her a helpless wreck, with no hope of getting off the shore. Poor little Sachem!—a saucier craft never floated on the water nor a bolder man than her commander JOHNSON. We all remember the noble part she took in the affair at Galveston; one of the few bright spots in that otherwise dark and hideous piece of business.

The enemy now ceased their fire on the Sachem and turned their attention to the remaining two boats; the crews of which, realizing the position of their brave comrades, redoubled their exertions.

The Arizona, unfortunately, drew too much water to get to close quarters, and it devolved upon the Clifton alone to undertake the perilous task of silencing the works—a task that might have daunted the stoutest hearts.

But the Clifton was manned by brave men, and most nobly did the gallant CROCKER and his crew respond to the call upon them. Putting on a full head of steam, the devoted little craft ran down directly toward the largest fort, keeping up a hot fire all the time from her pivot guns, and as she neared the works, loading with double charges of grape, sweeping the parapet at every discharge.

The Clifton had now approached to within about 400 yards, and after giving the emasculated ... of grape from her pivot, attempted to throw her bow around, and take up a broadside position. But she had gone a few yards too near, and as she slightly swung round, her bow struck—the velocity with which she was running driving her far upon the shore. She instantly commenced backing, keeping up a constant fire from her bow and port broadside guns, the former keeping the main target entirely clear of the enemy, while the latter played on the nearest battery.

This continued for some time, and later hopes were entertained that the gallant Captain would succeed in extricating his boat from her terrible position. But this was not to be; for, at last, a shot from the battery at the left penetrated her boiler, in an instant rendering her in the same condition as the Sachem.

THE RAFTER WORK.

The battle was now, to all intents and purposes, ended. Further resistance seemed utterly hopeless, but still the brave CROCKER could not endure the idea of giving up his vessel, and ordered his men to fight on. Without his knowledge, however, some early struck the white flag, and the enemy instantly ceased firing.

When informed of this, the Captain ordered the deck to be cleared, and, loading the after pivot-gun with a 9-inch solid shot, he fired it through the centre of the ship, from stem to stern, tearing the machinery in pieces, and rendering it utterly worthless to the enemy. After doing this, and spiking all the guns, the Clifton surrendered.

The remaining gunboat, the Arizona, quite unable to cope single-handed with the enemy, and drawing too much water to engage them in close quarters, reluctantly withdrew from the unequal contest, firing a farewell shot of defiance, as she steamed slowly down the bay, the enemy not replying to her challenge.

The Clifton had on board, beside her regular crew of one hundred and ten men, seventy-five sharpshooters; and the Sachem thirty sharpshooters—all of whom were captured, with the exception of seven men from the Clifton, who swam ashore, and down the beach, and were taken off by a small boat.

The loss of the armament of the Clifton is unquestionably a serious one; her powerful battery of rifled guns being one of the most effective in the service. The boats, however, are so much damaged that the guns, to be of any service to the enemy, will have to be removed from them and remounted, and consequently it will be a long time before they can be made available.

The amount of killed and wounded I have not been able to ascertain, though they are not supposed to be heavy. I am happy to add that Capts. CROCKER and JOHNSON are neither thought to have been killed or wounded, but both prisoners.

A great deal will, no doubt, be attempted to be made out of this temporary check to our proceedings, but that will avail the enemy little. As we have shown them, upon many former occasions, all we require to know is what we actually have to contend with and then the difficulty is overcome. As the London Daily News very shrewdly remarks: We have now settled down into that passive, determined mood of warfare when we can neither be elated by petty successes, nor depressed by petty reverses. Our army and navy are safe and sound. They are composed of men of the right sort, and you may depend upon some account of their prowess being made, sooner or later, of the affair of the Clifton and the Sachem. NEMO.

ARMY OF THE POTOMAC.

The Late Cavalry Fight.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

DUFFIELD'S COMMANDER, VA., Tuesday, Sept. 15, 1863.

On the morning of the 13th the cavalry division of Gen. KILPATRICK crossed the Rappahannock at Kelly's Ford, and marched in the direction of Culpepper by Brandy Station. No rebels in force were encountered until reaching Brandy Station, where the advance, consisting of the Harris Light, or Second New-York, met them in some force. A brisk skirmish ensued, the rebels however, immediately falling back toward Culpepper. At this place the division of KILPATRICK formed a junction with the divisions of BUFORD and GEGGE, the whole under command of Gen. PLEASANTON. The whole force advanced up the railroad toward Culpepper, Gen. KILPATRICK had the left, resting on the left of the railroad; Gen. BUFORD the centre, and Gen. GEGGE the right—the skirmishing and occasionally exchanging quite sharp as we advanced. As the cavalry moved across the plain in perfect order, some of the regiments in line, some in column, and a long line of skirmishers in front, with the batteries a little in the rear, the respective divisions and brigade commanders moving up with their Staffs, it presented one of the most brilliant spectacles of the war. The rebels did not make much resistance until we reached a point about one mile this side of Culpepper, where they opened three batteries upon KILPATRICK's division, but not checking the advance in the least. On approaching near the town, the rebels seemed disposed to dispute our further advance. A long line of dismounted infantry could be seen along a fence just across a deep creek, with two batteries in support. Gen. KILPATRICK ordered Gen. CUSTER to dislodge them, which he soon accomplished. The Sixth Michigan dismounted and engaged the rebel skirmishers, and soon routed them in good style. The Harris Light charged the battery on the edge of the town, capturing two guns. This brought the division of KILPATRICK to the edge of the town. BUFORD and GEGGE were driving the enemy on the right, and Gen. KILPATRICK, with characteristic boldness, was about to charge the whole rebel force upon our left, and capture the train of cars that was moving off toward Orange, but was prevented by the unexpected discovery of a deep creek which was only passable at one place in his front. This enabled the train to escape, affording time to the rebel cavalry to take up a strong position, a little to the rear of the town, in the woods on the Cedar Mountain road. In the meantime, Gen. CUSTER at the head of the First battalion of the First Vermont, commanded by Major WEST, dashed into town, driving the rebels out and capturing one piece of artillery to the right of the town. The rebels had two other pieces in the woods to the rear of the town, strongly supported by a strong force of cavalry. The Harris Light gallantly charged up into the woods where the rebels were posted, but were driven back by superior numbers. The First Vermont, consisting of two battalions, numbering about 150 men, under command of Major WEST, now gallantly advanced to charge under a heavy fire from the enemy's battery. The Harris Light promptly rallied, and both regiments charged into the woods and drove the rebels further towards the Cedar Mountain road. Our loss here was the heaviest of any during the day. Gen. CUSTER while leading the First Vermont, was wounded in the leg by the bursting of a shell, which also killed his horse, and the Harris Light sustained some loss, the extent of which I have been unable to learn. The rebels now formed just beyond the woods, where they had a battery in position. The Fifth New-York, and one battalion of the First Vermont charged upon the battery, but were repulsed, the rebels retreating to the woods in great force, but were driven out the second time, whereupon they retreated for the Rapidan, closely pursued for four miles by Gen. BUFORD, when operations for the day ceased.

Our casualties on this day were three killed and forty wounded. On the 14th the cavalry advanced to the Rapidan, and found the enemy strongly posted at the respective fords on the other side of the river. In the night the day previous the rebels were commanded by Gen. STUART, with the brigades of FITZHUGH LEE's and WADE HAMPTON's divisions of cavalry and five battalions of infantry. TROOPER.

GEN. BLUNT'S CAMPAIGN.

The War in Western Arkansas and the Indian Country.

REVIEW OF OPERATIONS.

THE ENTIRE REGION RECLAIMED.

A LOYAL FEELING DOMINANT.

FACTS CONCERNING THE INDIANS.

From Our Own Correspondent.

LEAVENWORTH, KAN., Tuesday, Sept. 15, 1863.

By the arrival of messengers from Gen. BLUNT's headquarters at Fort Smith, Arkansas, we have confirmation most certain of the complete evacuation of the Indian Territory by the rebel forces. This gratifying result has been gained with but trifling loss on our part, and the complete disorder of the rebels.

Since the 4th of July last—a little over two months—when everything looked gloomy and disheartening in the Indian Territory, Gen. BLUNT has, with a force never exceeding 4,000 effective men, defeated and routed completely (both demoralizing and demobilizing) a rebel force doubling and trebling his own in strength. It may be that the comparative isolation of the field of operations, and the absorbing interest of the contest at other points, have engrossed the public attention, but certain it is that the movements of Gen. BLUNT have rarely received that notice their deserve. A brief résumé will show this.

When Gen. BLUNT assumed command of the District of the Frontier in the latter part of June, he had a force—white, Indian and negroes included—of not more than 3,000 men. That force, by the addition of the Thirteenth Kansas and some cavalry, was raised to 4,000. At Fort Gibson, on the Arkansas, 180 miles south from Fort Scott, Col. PHILLIPS, with three regiments of Indians and partially disorganized Indians, a four-gun battery, and a few companies of nearly dismounted cavalry, had for four months been facing an enemy numbering not less than 7,000 men, who, if their leaders had had one tithe of the pluck of PHILLIPS, could at any time have "pocketed up" his entire force. There is not in the annals of this war a more striking example of tenacity and daring courage than that displayed by Col. PHILLIPS in so audaciously obeying the instructions of Gen. BLUNT and holding the Cherokee Territory, and thereby keeping Southern Kansas and Missouri from again being invaded.

Gen. BLUNT immediately pressed forward what troops he could gather, taking even the poorly armed and undrilled recruits just raised for the Fourteenth Kansas cavalry. Fortunately the Third Wisconsin cavalry, under Maj. CALKINS, was ordered to rendezvous at Fort Scott, with the intention of leaving the District. The emergency warranting it, Gen. BLUNT sent it to the field. Here commenced the rebel debacle. On the 1st and 2d of July, Col. WILLIAMS, of the First Kansas colored regiment, commanding escort, had severe engagements with the rebels under Brig.-Gen. WARD, who with a superior force was strongly posted at Cabin Creek. The rebels were defeated and driven off in utter rout. BLUNT reached Fort Gibson on the 11th of July, and on the 15th, with 2,500 men, crossed the Arkansas himself, making a detour, with cavalry, fifty miles, to outflank the enemy's advance, which he succeeded in doing, and on the morning of the 17th attacked the rebel COOPER, having a force of nearly 6,000, in a strong position. The rebels were badly beaten, losing 150 killed, 400 wounded, and 100 prisoners, with two guns, a flag, 500 stand of arms, and a lot of stores, etc.

On the 20th the rebels were largely reinforced, and numbering nearly 15,000, again advanced in Honey Springs, their pickets occupying the south bank of the Arkansas, and menaced Gen. BLUNT in rather formidable style. The latter, knowing that some reinforcements were on the WAY from Fort Scott, determined on their arrival to again attack the enemy.

Fortunately, while waiting for his own reinforcements, Col. DOBLE, Second Kansas, commanding a brigade, was moving to his assistance and Fayetteville, Ark. All having arrived, Gen. BLUNT, on the 22d of August, crossed the river, and moved upon the enemy. Though Gen. COOPER had at least 7,000 white troops, beside Indians, he had fallen back to Brian Town, North Fork, Canadian River, Creek Nation, fifty miles southeast of Fort Gibson. On hearing of BLUNT's movement he had to halt in Perryville, south of the Canadian River, in the Choctaw Nation, not more than 50 miles from the Red River of Texas. Gen. BLUNT pressed on, to his haste, with his cavalry, on the 25th ult., making, in one day, a march of 50 miles, surprising and capturing a strong rear-guard, and destroying all of STAND WATIE's and COOPER's stores. The enemy had already broken in different bodies, and were fleeing in disorder. STAND WATIE was fleeing with a portion of his army in the direction of Boggy Depot, 60 miles southwest of Perryville, about 16 miles from the Red River, and within a few miles of Fort McCullough, the only point left the Confederates in the entire Indian Territory.

The Creek regiments, (rebel,) under CHILI and UNI MOLTOOSE, retreated by way of North Fork Town. Gen. BLUNT, understanding their desire to return to allegiance, sent Col. JONES and the First brigade to bring them. This was successfully accomplished, and the restoration of the Creek Nation to the National Government is now assured. The laying down of their arms on the part of the followers of the Creek Chief, CHILI and UNI MOLTOOSE, secures peace, because it lends a fend of thirty-five years' standing, which has more to do with the Indians opposing SLAVERY and the rebellion than a direct interest therein.

COOPER, TANDY WALKER (Choctaws) and STAND WATIE (Cherokee) fled directly south to the Red River, notifying the Indians that they must abandon their country, or be treated by the rebels as enemies. The result of this notification was to induce the Choctaws to report to Col. CLAYTON bodies, asking protection.

Gen. BLUNT returned to Fort Town with the Second and Third brigades. The Second brigade, under Col. BOWEN, Thirteenth Kansas, was sent to Webber's Falls, about half-way between Fort Smith and Gibson. With the Third brigade, Col. COLONEL GEO. BLUNT pushed after CANNON, who was moving on to Fort Smith. CANNON was met with 1,000 or 1,500 men, twelve miles from the fort, at sunrise, and our troops charged two miles from town. Cannon retreated in haste. Col. CLOUD, with his own regiment, Capt. CRAWFORD commanding, the First Arkansas cavalry, and Rabb's battery, pushed after CANNON, who was traveling southward. Cloud skirmished fifteen or twenty miles, and had a brisk engagement. The enemy fled in disorder, after a few volleys. Capt. ED. LYNN, of the Second Kansas, was killed by an ambush, as was also SERGEANT, one of Gen. BLUNT's escorts. Pushing on with the rest of the brigade, the General had in the meantime detached the foot and mounted the day which Capt. Sanborn (now General) required, which he executed well and to Lynn, 1863.

This is a hasty résumé of the last campaign of Gen. BLUNT, one whose results are the emancipation of the Southwest, and in the territorial area of the region restored to the National Government, will be found to be of very great, though not of as permanent importance as other campaigns in the Mississippi Valley or the Western slopes of the Appalachian range, under GRANT, BANKS, ROSECRANS and BURNSIDE. It has been made against the opposition, not only of a Department Commander, but also from home, a powerful political opposition contributing to prevent the return of the Indians from Kansas, who were being fed as refugees in Kansas. With miserably meagre forces, a long line of state protection, inefficiently guarded, a few largely disorganizing his own forces, Gen. BLUNT has within two months pushed the National lines moreover hundred miles to the border of Texas. He has restored Western Arkansas as well as the Indian Nations. A brief historical memory will best illustrate the value of the work done by his gallant army.

Fort Smith is in Sebastian County, Arkansas, on the Arkansas, at the mouth of the Poteau River, one hundred and sixty-five miles west by north of Little Rock. It is a place of great importance to the rebels. Gen. BLUNT found here an extensive military factory, as also other works. The post buildings are fine, and cost the United States Government $200,000. The centre of the plateau on which they are built is inclosed by a heavy stone wall, ditched and strengthened by outworks. Fort Smith is the head of navigation on the Arkansas. Others is 40 miles west by land and 100 by water. The trade of Fort Smith is large, and as a military position and depot it was and is the controlling point on the Southwest Border. It was here that McCULLOCH assembled the army which encountered with Price in the campaign terminated at Springfield, Mo.

It is a well known fact that the people of Western Arkansas were at first strongly opposed to secession. A meeting held at Van Buren on the 19th of January, 1861, declared it and declared that the election of Lincoln was not sufficient cause for separation. The Convention calling a convention to consider the question of secession stood 32,412 for, and 15,826 against. Nine-tenths of the latter votes were cast west of Little Rock. The vote on delegates stood, Union, 27,241; Secession, 17,327. While the convention was in session a test vote resulted, 39 against secession and 27 for. Salutes were fired both at Fort Smith and Van Buren in honor of the thirty-nine Union votes. Under the excitement of Sumter the ordinance of secession was passed. The Union feeling has always remained strong. Gen. BLUNT and Col. PHILLIPS raised three regiments in the northwestern counties, and in Scott County there has been a Union guerrilla force of 300 for some months past. The presence of Gen. BLUNT's army, and the movements of DAVIDSON and STEELE will insure success. Western Arkansas certainly, and probably the entire State, will soon be applying, with loyal citizens, for restoration to the old rank in the Federal Union.

The extent of the Indian Territory may be readily seen when it is known that it extends east and west from the Arkansas west line to the east line of New-Mexico, a distance of 500 miles; and from Kansas to Texas, north and south, about 250 miles. It is watered by the Arkansas, Canadian and Red Rivers, and by a number of important minor streams, such as the Illinois, Neosho and Verdigris. It is in the same latitude as Southern Tennessee and Northern Mississippi and Alabama, a region admirably for cereal grains, fruits, cotton, tobacco, and other Southern staples. It was, previous to the war, one of the great grazing regions of the West.

There is a present population (Indian) of 65,600; whites, 1,098; slaves, 7,369, (according to census of 1860, but according to present state of affairs, not more than half of that number.) These slaves were divided: Cherokees, 2,504; Creeks, 1,651; Chickasaws, 917; Choctaws, 2,296. The Seminoles owned no slaves, and but eight whites were resident in the nation. As a consequence, they were all loyal, except about 50 bribed by PIKE. Of the 75,000 living in the Indian Territory, at least 65,000 are more vividly feel that their neighbors of Arkansas, Missouri and Texas. The Choctaws were large cotton planters, some raising their 500 to 600 bales of cotton annually.

That the restoration of this Territory is complete, a glance at some facts in the history of the Indian nations will show. I mentioned the return to allegiance of the Creeks under CHILI and UNI MOLTOOSE. These are the sons of the Agent, MCINTOSH, who was engaged in the Creek war with JACKSON in 1813, and who, in 1825, was murdered by the tribe for alleged treachery in ceding their lands by treaty to the United States. They had lived in Georgia, and in 1832 were finally removed to their present location. Out of the fraudulent treaty of MOLTOOSE grew factions which have had more to do with the divisions of rebel and loyal than those sentiments themselves. It is curious to see how Slavery has tied itself to one side and embittered the quarrel. The MOLTOOSES lead, or led the half-breed, Slavery propaganda as well as pro-treaty party. OPOTHLEYAHOLO, a large slaveholder, led the anti-treaty party. This party are now in favor of abolishing Slavery.

A similar quarrel, even more bitter, has existed among the Cherokee Creeks. Agent MCINTOSH seems to have been a useful tool of the Southern party. We early find him trying to bribe JOHN ROSS, in 1817-18. ROSS, or KOWESCOWES, is the son of a Scotch trader and half-breed woman. He, like all the leaders of these nations, has received a collegiate education, and is a man of considerable ability. He was opposed to ceeding the lands of his people, which were then part of the State of Georgia. In 1829, as agent of his nation, appealed from the State Legislature to the Supreme Court of the United States. In this he was successful. A series of aggressions was continued by the Georgians till 1835, when the Cherokee agent, J. F. SCHERMERHORN, with Major RINES, JOHN RINES and BOUNNER, with 500 other Indians, entered into a treaty for the cession of their lands. JOHN ROSS and 15,000 protested against this fraud, known as the treaty of New-Echota. The Government, however, insisted on its provisions, and Gen. SCOTT was sent with a force to enforce the same. The Cherokees removed West. The RINES and BOUNNER were put to death by the nation. This nearly was the cause of the bitterest feud existing among the nations. STAND WATIE is the leader of the Ridge party. His defeat and flight will heal the dissensions among the Cherokees, and cement them all as a loyal people. Their Legislature not only abolished Slavery, but made the negroes citizens.

It is a curious speculation to know what will be the future of these nations. It cannot be possible to continue them as nations much longer. Western, well educated, with large tribal territorial and military possessions, and a population that, with the proposed removal of Kansas Indians to that Territory, will reach at 100,000, why is it not possible to organize a Territorial Government, and let them be represented in Congress? It is certainly necessary for the interests of this region that a form of Government under the direct control of the National authorities should be adopted in place of the present lawless state. This country is now in a condition to be admitted, and order and security. We organized, with the exception of some three years and one and two years, by their own Territory, which (Nebraska is a) in the Southwest, and save for war have been State. We certainly can no more tolerate an Indian than a Mexican State, even in New-Mexico, with more than it shall, except as Indian Agents, acting as Confederate Commissioners, helped to give one of the inducements for three States to join with the South, that they should have a delegate in the Confederate Congress to represent them interests. Certain it is that a Territorial Government would be the best method of emerging them out of their prey ... and ... ...

The Swiss Schuetzenfest.

FOURTH DAY.

Saturday, the last and closing day of the great Swiss shooting festival, according to the programme, was to have witnessed a grand turn-out of sharpshoot ing amateurs, and gay people of all sexes and ages; for in the afternoon the celebrated Arion Singing Club, assisted by Hoffmann's Jew-harp band, in person, was to have given a delightful concert, and in the evening the prizes were to have been distributed; the whole affair to conclude with a smoky ball and supper. But the Clerk of the Weather had not been consulted in the premeditations, and vented his spleen accordingly.

The Festival, of course, progress we have made daily, opened, and had fired well on Thursday and Friday, owing to our Southern visitors, but on Saturday it was absolutely maltreated. The wind howled and the rain poured among the trees at Jones' Wood on the morning of a real April gale without the cease, where of the Aldermanic fire is presumed, in this case, to lie in all senses of the word a best idea this week at the hotel, but the number of his visitors in this instance exceeded the counterfeits accommodations of his house, and hence, poor wretch, he and his guest had to spend all day. The number of those gentle sojourners assembled clearly what a success the closing day of the Fest would have been with more propitious skies. However uncomfortable the general state of things, the shooting commenced, as usual, at 7 A. M., and continued with but little interruption throughout the entire day—the leading targets, "Switzerland" and "Liberty," coming in for some attention than before. Outside dancing was, of course, not to be thought of—the dancing platform, in consequence, holding the private little knots of elated pretenders, but the Germania Musical Band, greatly moved by the disconsolate aspect of his guests of the festival, at advanced hour of the day ordered his large dining-tents for a general dance, the proceed for which was received with enthusiastic shouts of gratitude, the very infants uplifting their Teutonic voices to swell the chorus, with a style of justice to be achieved by Swiss or German babies only. Several officers from Ritter's Island, representing Fatherland and also the home of Tell, arrived late in the afternoon, and add their mite to the scene and Hirschmann's Rifle regimental band came out and gaily, so that rain and rhyncmatism myrmidons forgotten.

Meanwhile, the shooting outside terminated at 4 P. M., and the "markers," with their picturesque red caps and tunics, and white pantaloons, slightly the worse for water, the Appenzellers, in their wild mountain costume, the whole William Tell and Melchtal, and the rest of the quaintly-attired corps of the sharpshooting of the Society of Schuetzenfest, joined the new jovialty room, and the fun grew fast and furious, considering the weather.

The desultory character of the shooting and other drawbacks, prevented the Committee on Prizes from announcing their decisions, and the distribution of prizes was deferred until this afternoon. The Arion Society likewise postponed their concert until o'clock to-day, when especial preparations and exertions will be made to recover the unfortunate attitude of the past week. Various newspaper of richness, including the New-York Schwarze, and others from Brooklyn, Bloomingdale and New-Jersey, will send the list of competitors. The regular shooting for prizes was destined to commence on Sunday morning, but it is possible that, under peculiar circumstances, it may be postponed to-day. We have, heretofore, fully indicated the character of the regulations adopted by the Schuetzenfest for this Festival, but as we find that many American and English marksmen manifest an inquiring interest regarding the system pursued, we will briefly allude to them again.

There are two great targets, marked respectively "Switzerland" and "Liberty." At the first the charge for a chance, or five shots, is $1; at the second, for the same privilege, $2. No money, $700 in money prizes, varying in value from $5 to $100 are staked upon the first target, and about $600 on the second. Independent of these are eight minor targets marked successively with the first eight letters of the alphabet. The charge per shot at these is one dime of our currency. Among these one hundred prizes are divided to be awarded to such competitors as may hit the bull's eye of either target five times in succession with the most exact accuracy. The other arrangements in reference to marking and designation of shots are in strict accordance with the rules and practice of the great biennial national Shooting Festivals in Switzerland, and have been heretofore lengthily described. The whole forms a most striking, curious and animated scene.

It is believed that with any kind of convenience from the weather, the Wood will be crowded with happy throngs, and the charming vocal and instrumental music promised will greatly add to the interest of the closing ceremonies. Moreover, it is quite probable that several civic and military dignitaries of this neighborhood will be present to enjoy the scene.

Result of the Draft.

From present appearances, the draft in this City will result in securing about 5,000 soldiers to the Government—a little more than twenty-five per cent. of the whole number drafted. The Enrolling Boards in the six districts of this City have about half completed their work of hearing claims for exemption, and the following is the result thus far:

FOURTH DISTRICT.

Held to service	197	Exempted	888
Substitutes	165	Laid over	317
Commuted	19
Total			1,786

FIFTH DISTRICT.

Held to service	192	Exempted for disability	328
Substitutes	165	Exempted for other causes	244
Commuted	9
Total			1,138

SIXTH DISTRICT.

Held to service	208	Exempted for disability	638
Substitutes	226	Exempted for other causes	898
Commuted	72
Total			2,134

SEVENTH DISTRICT.

Held to service	149	Exempted for disability	574
Substitutes	187	Exempted for other causes	867
Commuted	3
Total			1,780

EIGHTH DISTRICT.

Held to service	242	Commuted	22
Substitutes	64	Exempted	1,424
Total			1,672

NINTH DISTRICT.

Held to service	240	Exempted	722
Substitutes	92	Laid over	119
Commuted	4
Total			1,186

RECAPITULATION.

Held to service	1,148	Exempted	4,192
Substitutes	894	Laid over	436
Commuted	101
Grand total			6,111

From the above table it appears that 2,111 soldiers have thus far been obtained, and $93,200 has been paid to the Government in the shape of commutation money. The larger portion of those who have been examined claimed exemption from one cause or another, and there is no doubt that there will be less exemptions in proportion to the number among the remaining 10,000 men to be examined than there has been among the first 10,000, as it has been found that those who have the strongest claims present themselves first. It is probable, therefore, that the number of good hold, including substitutes, will reach at least 3,000, and perhaps more. This is not a very flattering result of the draft, but it is much better than many anticipated. It is thought that the Enrolling Boards will complete their work by the end of this month, after which they will commence arresting those who have not responded to the notices served upon them.

County Substitute and Relief Committee.

This Committee sent out sixty-three substitutes, Saturday, of whom seven were rejected. One of the substitutes was a colored man, sent for a colored conscript. It was the second case of the kind. The Committee first tried the experiment of offering a colored man for a white man, at the request of a white conscript, who brought the colored man before them. The colored man was refused, and word was brought back that colored substitutes could be received only for colored conscripts. Several militiamen were rejected because their statements under oath showed that they had not been active in attention to the militia duties, and one man, from Brooklyn, was rejected for the reason that both his residence and business were in Brooklyn, and that his business was of a profitable character, while his attention to duty had not been of a very active character. So far only two militiamen resident in Brooklyn have been cited by the Committee. In these cases the men had both been out to the war every time one regiment went, and had served here during the riots.

So far the Committee have given aid to applicants in about 600 cases. Of these about 200 were indigent persons, 100 firemen, 100 militia men and 75 Policemen. The Committee did not pass a single case without a substitute last week. About 610 substitutes have been furnished in all. A Mr. LAMPITE appeared yesterday and complained that her husband, having gone as a substitute for Jas. BARNET, a butcher, gave BARNET $500 to give her, which he refused to do. BARNET was summoned and satisfied that LAMPITE gave him the money to give to his children at the rate of $3 a week, and that he had given the mother $10.

BARNET's story was not believed by the Committee, from the fact that Mrs. LAMPITE held the order of her husband upon BARNET to deliver the money to her. BARNET was required to comply with the order, which he did, and accompanied by a messenger, sent by the Committee, Mrs. LAMPITE went and deposited the money in a savings' bank.

Howard Mission and Home for Little Wanderers.

This excellent institution, which was forced to close its doors on the second day of the riots, by the threats of Gov. SEYMOUR's "friends," but was finally saved from the torch by the intervention of a Catholic priest, and by the fact that the burning of the Mission building would endanger the Catholic Church in the rear, has reopened again at No. 27 New-Bowery, and is in a more flourishing condition than ever before. Over 300 pupils attend the daily school conducted by the Mission, where they are instructed in English branches and music by the best teachers, and get a good wholesome dinner every day gratis. The Newsboys' Mission does not keep a house in their building, but supplies the wants of needy families who are reported as deserving by their missionaries, and pre-

The Metropolitan Police—Their Drill and Discipline.

To the drill and discipline of the Metropolitan Police was mainly due their success during the riots. Taken unawares, suddenly called upon to meet mobs well armed and overwhelming in numbers, they would have been powerless but for the military drill the strict discipline they have been subjected to. This regulation of the Department has been looked upon as unnecessary by very many citizens; and not a few of the force, prior to the riots, deemed it useless, annoying and oppressive. It was the means of saving and City and saving them. The capacity which suggested it received an entire vindication in July. Commissioners A. Crolk and BERGEN, at a late meeting adopted a resolution which is embodied in the following admirable order:

OFFICE OF THE BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS OF POLICE, No. 300 Mulberry-street, New-York, Sept. 17, 1863.

GENERAL ORDER, No. 231.—Capt. ——, ——Precinct: The success of the Metropolitan Police in the late riots was due chiefly to the efficiency of the discipline they had previously been subjected to (and to any physical superiority they possessed. It was not by overpowering numbers that large bodies of determined men, heavily armed, and inspired by rage and enthusiasm, were so speedily routed and scattered to the wind. But by the perfect concentration evinced by every portion of the forces, the ease with which orders were understood, the readiness with which they were complied with, the facility of movements made, and the consummate skill evinced in taking advantage of the advantage of performing a necessary act.

It is not only proper that this discipline should be kept up to the former standard, but it is equally important that it should be improved on, and especially in with company and platoon officers.

The Board being influenced by such considerations have, at a recent meeting, provided penalties for neglect of attendance at the regular drills of the police. Hereafter the penalty for absence of company and platoon officers will be, for first offence three days, each subsequent one five days' pay. For absence of patrolmen, first offence one day, each subsequent one three days' pay.

GENERAL CITY NEWS.

ROBBED IN THE STREET.—Mr. ADAM SCHILLING, of No. 229 Ninth-avenue, yesterday appeared before Police Justice KELLY, and made complaint against WILLIAM DUFFY, whom he charged, in company with two others, with having knocked him down and robbed him of a watch and chain. The affair occurred about 12 o'clock on Saturday night, in Fortieth-street. SCHILLING was knocked down into a basement area, and was so stunned by the fall that the robbery was easily effected. Officer MOULTRAN, of the Twentieth Precinct, arrested DUFFY and found upon him the stolen chain. He was committed in default of $2,000 bail.

MAJ. R. J. FALLS.—The many friends of Maj. R. J. FALLS will be pleased to learn that he has so far recovered from the injuries received in Gen. STONEMAN's raid in the rear of LEE's army as to be able to perform light duty. He has been ordered on Gen. HAYES's Staff, at Philadelphia, where his duties are mainly the instruction of young officers. He is now in this City on furlough. The Major is a gallant officer and patriotic man; went into the war free from a conviction of duty, and intends, if his life is spared, to continue in it till the close.

A SERGEANT OF THE POLICE SERIOUSLY INJURED.—On Friday, about 10 o'clock, as Sergt. WRYNN, of the First Precinct, was passing up Fulton-street, he was very seriously injured by some brick falling on his head from the top of the Sun building. He was taken to the Second Precinct Station-house and soon after to the New-York Hospital by Officer MCNEERY, of the Second. His wounds, though very severe, are not regarded as dangerous. The bricks from the Sun building were blown off by the high wind prevailing at the time.

A DISHONEST SERVANT.—JOHANNA BRANNON, a domestic in the employ of Mrs. HELEN C. RANDOLPH, of No. 61 Leroy-street, was arrested, yesterday, charged with having stolen a box containing over $600 in money, from the sleeping-room of her employer. The box was broken open, and the money taken out. JOHANNA made an attempt to burn the box, but being interrupted in this, she threw a portion of it into the sink, where it was found. She was committed for trial.

ARREST OF COUNTERFEITERS.—THOMAS HOVENET, CHAS. ARMSTRONG and CHAS. SHORT were arrested yesterday, charged with passing counterfeit $5 bills on the Brandon Bank, of Brandon, Vt., on Saturday night. There were large quantities of this spurious money put afloat on Saturday night, in the upper part of the City, and the public would do well to be careful in regard to the $5s of this Bank. The prisoners were all committed for examination.

THE HOWARD MISSION.—This excellent institution at No. 27 New Bowery, was reopened by Mr. W. C. VANDERZEE, Superintendent, on the 7th inst., and up to date he has welcomed back 305 of his scattered flock.

THE NATIONAL HORSE FAIR.—The deferred ladies' saddle race, and the trot between Butler, Pilgrim and Prince, will take place to-day on the Fashion Course.

COMMISSARY OF MUSTERS.—Capt. WILSON BARROW, Aid-de-Camp, has been appointed Commissary of Musters for the Department of the East.

THE PAROCHIAL FUND OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH IN THE DIOCESE OF NEW-YORK—Organized under a special act of the Legislature, passed April 15, 1862, to receive and dispense gifts and bequests for the benefit of the Church within large and growing parishes, and thus to aid in the support of Pastors, the purchase of globes, and the building of parsonages, and thus to relieve the evil of an inadequate provision for the parish clergy.

Trustees: Right Rev. Horatio Potter, D.D., ex officio; John Jay, John A. Dix, James Lenox, Peter Parker, John K. Mitchell, Morris Helliwell, John Jacob Astor.

The Diocesan Convention have unanimously approved the scheme, which has been matured with unusual care. Bishop Potter has advised the Diocese, "The plan has my hallest sanction," and has invited the attention of wealthy laymen to the security it affords to those seeking to benefit the Church by gift or devise of moneys and lands.

All remittances of Church collections and other moneys may be made by mail to JAMES F. DE PEYSTER, Treasurer Parochial Fund, Bank of Savings, Bleecker-st., New-York.

And all other communications to the Board of Trustees or agent, to Rev. SYLVANUS REED, General Agent, Office Parochial Fund, St. George's Chapel, Beekman-st., New-York.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE REBELLION.

From the headquarters of the Army of the Cumberland, at Crawford Springs, Ga., we have a dispatch, dated on Saturday night, giving an account of a desperate fight which had raged that day between the rebels under Johnston, Polk, Hill and Longstreet, and a part of Gen. Rosecrans' army, under Gens. Thomas, McCook, Crittenden and Van Cleve. The attack was made by the enemy, who threw a very heavy force against the corps of Gen. Thomas, forming the left wing of our army, and at the same time opened fire as a feint upon our right. The aim of the rebel commander was to get between Gen. Rosecrans and Chattanooga, but his plan was quickly developed, and after seven hours' hard fighting, in which the advantage alternated with the opposing forces, the enemy was finally repulsed, and our lines reestablished as before the engagement. The fighting was entirely by the infantry, as the character of the country was such that artillery could not be effectively used. Our casualties in wounded were heavy, but exceedingly few in killed. We had no general officers injured. A dispatch from Gen. Rosecrans to the General-in-Chief states that the battle would probably be resumed yesterday.

By the arrival at this port of the steamship Columbia, from New-Orleans, we have particulars of an expedition under Gen. Franklin to the mouth of the Sabine River, Texas, which has proved unsuccessful. On arriving at the place designed for the landing of the troops, outside the enemy's fortifications, it was found impossible to disembark owing to the marshy nature of the ground and excessively shallow water. Upon the gunboats Clifton, Sachem and Arizona, therefore, devolved the whole task of attacking the batteries, and they came gallantly up to the work. The bombardment continued some time, gradually increasing in briskness, until the vessels got within point-blank range of the forts, when the enemy suddenly opened a terrific fire, in which they were aided by a fleet of three cotton-clad steamers and a schooner further up the river. At first the fire from our gunboats was more accurate than that of the enemy, and we seemed clearly to be getting the advantage, but unfortunately the Sachem grounded broadside to the rebel fleet, and very soon she was riddled and left an utter wreck. The Arizona's greater draft of water would not admit of her nearer approach to the batteries, and the Clifton was compelled to essay the task of silencing them unaided. In the gallant attempt she also struck hard on the bottom and was not long before meeting a fate similar to the Sachem's. Capt. Crocker, her commander, made an heroic effort to save his vessel, but seeing the matter hopeless, he loaded his after gun with a 9-inch solid shot and fired it through the centre of the ship, crashing the machinery in pieces and effectually destroying the vessel. The Arizona was then forced reluctantly to withdraw, unable to cope singly with the enemy. Besides the vessels' crews we lost as prisoners 90 soldiers who were acting as sharpshooters. The numbers killed and wounded are not very large.

We have one day's later advices from Charleston by the arrival of the steamship McClellan. Gen. Gillmore is still sedulously engaged in mounting heavy guns at Fort Wagner and Cummings Point to bombard the city. The fire from the rebel works on James Island had proved somewhat annoying to the working parties, but casualties were few. The Columbia brought 109 rebel prisoners taken at Fort Wagner.

The intelligence received from all our armies that the rebel military organizations are losing heavily from desertions is fully confirmed by rebel newspapers, as well as by the orders of their Generals and proclamations from Jeff. Davis and the Governors of the States in insurrection. There is scarcely a rebel paper to which there are not many references to this subject, the importance of which they cannot dispute. Whenever our armies are confronted by rebels, there is a constant stream of deserters coming in, and all tell the same story. They have endured insufferable hardships, and believe the cause in which they have been fighting is hopeless. The rebels west of the Mississippi, maintaining only a stealthy communication with the heads of the rebellion, are most demoralized, and seem to have only vitality enough to run.

It is reported that the rebel Major-Gen. Marsh Walker was mortally wounded on Sunday the 6th inst., in a duel with the rebel Gen. Marmaduke at Bayou Metaire. The difficulty was occasioned by Marmaduke's jealousy of Walker, who had recently been promoted from the subordinate to the ranking General.

FROM EUROPE.

By the arrival at this port Saturday afternoon of the steamship City of Cork, from Liverpool Sept. 5 and Queenstown Sept. 7, we have Cork papers to the 7th inst.—two days later. The news is not important. The question of the recognition of the rebels by France was still a topic of newspaper discussion, and the victualling of the Florida at Brest was considered a still more explicit declaration of Napoleon's intentions in this regard than the late pamphlet on "France, Mexico and the Confederate States." The deputation from Mexico to offer the crown to the Archduke Maximilian had arrived, and it was considered positive that he would accept it. The insurgents in Poland on the 3d inst. drove 300 Russian troops across the Gallician frontier. Consols, after official hours, closed at 93⅛ to 93⅜.

GENERAL NEWS.

Saturday, the fourth day of the Swiss Shooting Festival having proven extremely unfavorable, the distribution of prizes to successful marksmen and the grand vocal and instrumental concert of the Arion Singing Club have been postponed until this afternoon. Throughout the earlier part of the day shooting at the various minor targets will be open to all comers under the general rules, and as it is expected that a large concourse and several distinguished visitors will be present, special arrangements for the accommodation of passengers to Jones' Wood have been adopted by the Second and Third-avenue Railroads.

Late Santa Fe papers announce the good progress of Col. Carson's expedition against the Navajoes, and the severe punishment that these savages are receiving bids fair to put a speedy stop to the depredations which have so long distressed the settlers in that territory.

There have recently been some additions to the number of traveling newspapers in the South, which now, together with the wandering Executives and itinerant State Governments, would make a respectable caravan. The following are the names and present locations of these migratory journals: Memphis (Tenn.) Appeal, at Atlanta, Ga.; Chattanooga (Tenn.) Rebel, at Marietta, Ga.; Knoxville (Tenn.) Register, at Cleveland, Ga.; Huntsville (Ala.) Confederacy, at Marietta, Ga. The Charleston papers will next join the flying caravan, and probably locate at Columbia, the capital of South Carolina.

The Stock Market was firm on Saturday, the speculation of the day running mainly on New-York Central and Erie. Sales of Central late in the day at 132½ per cent. Gold advanced to 134⅜ per cent.

A brisk business was transacted in Breadstuffs on Saturday at advanced prices. Cotton, Sugars and Tallow were also freely purchased at buoyant rates. Provisions were in fair demand and generally firm. Hay, Hops, Hides, Leather, Fish and Tobacco were in good request. Wool was quite active. Linseed Oil and Spirits Turpentine were more sought after and much dearer. Freights were quiet, with 598 vessels of all classes in port.

France, Mexico and the United States.

The foreign papers continue to circulate the report that our Government has issued a formal protest against the French operations in Mexico; and some of them add that this protest is couched in such direct and energetic terms that it can scarcely fail to incur the displeasure and resentment of the Emperor of the French.

These reports may be true, but they strike us as improbable. We have certainly, up to the present time, no authentic information to give them even a show of truth. Our Minister in Mexico remains there still accredited to the Republican or Juarez Government, which, at the latest advices, had its headquarters at San Luis Potosi, and seemed not in the least inclined to surrender its authority over the country. Nor are we aware that any demand has been made, either by the French Emperor or by the Triumvirate which his armies have installed into power at Mexico, upon the Government at Washington that we should recognize the new order of things or cease to maintain diplomatic relations with the Government which they claim to have superseded. And until we have some such official communication from some quarter or other, we do not well see how we can be called on or expected to take any action in the premises. All we have done up to the present time, so far as the public has any knowledge on the subject, has been to ignore the presence of the French authority in Mexico, and to maintain the same relations as hitherto with the only Government of the country which we have ever recognized.

When we are called upon to recognize the new order of things, it will be quite time to decide upon the course of conduct which it becomes us to adopt. We certainly cannot recognize any Government which the French may seek to impose upon the people of Mexico, so long as that effort is resisted with any degree of vigor and courage by any considerable portion of the Mexican people. In that respect we hold the same position toward Mexico which France holds toward us; and while we demand that France shall not recognize the Southern Confederacy so long as our Government maintains and prosecutes the determination to crush the rebellion on which it rests, we must also refuse any premature recognition of any new regime in Mexico. It does not seem, moreover, to be as yet by any means settled what will be the character of the new Mexican Government. Prince Maximilian, according to the latest advices, consents to accept the throne only upon certain guarantees of its stability from the leading Powers of Europe, which one or two of them seem scarcely likely to give. Before the matter is finally settled, we presume that the assent of the United States will be solicited to any plan which may be resolved upon,—as neither France nor Austria would be likely to undervalue the importance of our assent to the permanence of any arrangement which they might desire to make. And when that assent is asked, our Government will have an opportunity, which it will doubtless embrace, to discuss the whole question in all its bearings.

Meantime, it need not be forgotten that the French Government has disclaimed, in the most distinct and formal manner, all thought or intention of any permanent occupation of Mexico, or of imposing upon the country any government to which the great body of her people may be hostile. It is not to be hastily assumed that France desires or intends to repudiate these pledges. Such flagrant perfidy always involves a certain loss of national character and position with other Powers, which is precisely the loss which France cannot just now afford to incur. Nor need it be supposed that either the United States or England, who are almost equally interested in the redemption of those pledges, is forgetful of their existence, or will prove indifferent to their fulfillment.

We do not credit the rumor that our Government has protested against the movements of the French in Mexico. It seems to us much more likely, as our Paris correspondent suggests, that we have done nothing whatever on the subject,—that no occasion has yet arisen for our diplomatic intervention, and that President Lincoln will await further developments before he feels called upon to take any action whatever in the premises.

The Path of Peace—How is the War to End?

The Peace party at the North is constantly calling on the Government to suspend hostilities and open negotiations with the Confederate authorities for the termination of the war. President Lincoln is constantly assailed for having repelled overtures of this sort from the rebel Government, although as a matter of fact no such overtures have ever been made. But even if they had, it is not easy to see how they could have been accepted or entertained without surrendering the whole question at issue.

The following extract from the very able article which we copied last week from the Raleigh (N. C.) Standard, puts this matter in a very clear and forcible light:

"The Observer, very ingeniously and very justly, in one sense, says that negotiations for peace can be instituted only through the Confederate Government. But we must look at things as they are, and not as we would have them. If Mr. Lincoln should so far recognize Mr. Davis as to open negotiations with him, he would surrender the whole question of the war. To treat with the Confederate Government for peace is to recognize that Government. Will Mr. Lincoln do that? No. Will he ever do it? Not unless the Northern Governors and Legislatures shall rise up and command him to do it. Is that probable? Not in the present status of things. We may worry the Northern people to such a point, or we might so interest foreign Powers as to induce them to take steps which would lead to such a result; but are these things probable? Not just now—not, we fear, for some time to come. What then? Shall we again invade the Northern States, and so distress them by fire and sword as to compel them to sue for peace? Can we do that? If the Federal Government will not hear the Confederate Government, it may hear the sovereign States. The people of the States North and South, by mutual cooperation may obtain an armistice. If that can be done, the war will be at an end. Is it not worth the trial? If the two armies should once rest to listen to the voice of negotiation, our word for it, hostilities would not be renewed. The whole question would pass, and pass finally, into the hands of the statesmen of the two nations."

We commend this paragraph to the attention of the Peace party. It comes from a quarter which entitles it to respect, and it ought to have special weight with those who clamor for negotiation with the rebel authorities as the initial step toward restoring peace and the Union. "To treat with the Confederate Government for peace," says the Standard, itself a Confederate journal, "is to recognize that Government." Is not this perfectly evident? We might, to be sure, deny any such recognition, and expressly stipulate that we dealt with them only as rebels and not as an organized Government; but any such protest would simply defeat the negotiation and render it impossible. If we treat with Jeff. Davis in any way whatever concerning the future relations of the rebel States to the Union, we acknowledge his rightful authority to speak for those States; we recognize him as the representative head of the people of those States,—as wielding their power and embodying their will, and what is this but a recognition of his Government? If we were to send a Minister or an agent of any sort to negotiate with Davis, on any subject beyond the details of military operations in the field, or if we were to receive any agent he might send, England and France would have the warrant of our example for doing the same. If we should receive Mr. Seward, England might receive Mr. Mason and France might receive Mr. Slidell, and we could make no just or effective protest against it.

Our position is, that the war is a rebellion, and that the only possible way of ending it is by putting that rebellion down, or, by its success. We can have nothing whatever to do with it as an organized Government, for the moment we accept it as such we lose all right to treat it as a rebellion. We must then treat the South as a foreign Power, and the war becomes a foreign war. On such a basis the only hope of restoring the Union lies in the absolute conquest and subjugation of the Southern people.

How, then, can peace be restored? As the Standard suggests, by the action of the people in the rebel States. Let them demand peace, and they will get it. Let them repudiate the authority of the rebel usurpation, and take the control of affairs into their own hands, and they will very speedily end the war. Let them send to Washington men representing their wishes, and authorized to speak on their behalf, and they will have no difficulty in securing for them not only a hearing, but through them all the rights and immunities guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States.

The Sabine Pass Affair.—The Texas Expedition will not be baulked for any length of time by the unfortunate repulse of our three gunboats at Sabine Pass. We are astonished, however, that a more accurate knowledge was not obtained of the ground in the vicinity of the mouth of the Sabine River before the troops, transports and gunboats were sent from New-Orleans. It is said that, "on arriving at the spot on which our troops were destined to land, it was found impossible to effect anything, owing to the marshy nature of the ground and the excessively shallow water." Now we have had blockading vessels cruising off the mouth of the Sabine River for two years, and we should think that during that time reconnoissances might have been made that would have established the depth of water and the nature of the soil in the vicinity. Not only have we had blockaders there, but Sabine Pass itself was held by our forces for a time last year, and all the needed knowledge must, or should, then have been acquired. This repulse has not only compelled Gen. Franklin and his troops to put back to New-Orleans, but has given the enemy a knowledge of our plans, and of the point from which our forces were to operate, which had been kept so carefully secret prior to the departure of the expedition. The rebels will now, of course, go to work erecting earthworks and other defences at all the approaches to Sabine Pass and River, and we know by experience the labor and difficulty of overcoming well-devised, even though hastily constructed, earthworks. The fact, too, that the rebels have gained this initial success will greatly encourage them, and will procure them many recruits from Texas, which has yet a large fighting force within its borders. It is probable that this repulse will soon compel our army to find some other landing point from which to prosecute operations against Texas.

The Battle in Georgia.

Gen. Rosecrans has again met the enemy, whom he fought and defeated at the opening of the year, and whom he has been pursuing for the past three months, for the purpose of fetching to the test of battle. It has been an unaccountable mystery why Gen. Bragg should have executed such a series of retreats as he has carried his army through since it occupied Murfreesboro—why he should have evacuated in succession points of such vast natural and artificial strength as Shelbyville, Tullahoma, and especially Chattanooga. The reason, however, was probably simply because, though his positions were very strong, his army was not of sufficient magnitude and courage to cope with the well-trained Western legions that Gen. Rosecrans marched upon him. Had Rosecrans attacked him in front of any of the positions named, Bragg, with his advantages, might have had a show of success; but the flanking movement so skillfully executed by Gen. Rosecrans in each instance, necessitated that Bragg should come forth from his stronghold and give battle on ground where his acquired advantages availed him nothing.

At last, however, in the evacuation of Chattanooga, Bragg had got to a point in his retreats when further backward movement was destruction. To have retreated from Rome or Atlanta would have been to give up Alabama, Mississippi and Upper Georgia, and would have given us a pass to the important parts of the Carolinas sloping from the Alleghanies. Bragg and all his army knew this—Jeff. Davis and the whole Confederacy knew it. Hence, as a matter of necessity, Bragg halted his columns but a short distance south of Chattanooga, and Davis made haste to reinforce him from West and East. The army of Joe Johnston, which, since its defeat at the capital of Mississippi, had been unable to subserve any military purpose, and had wandered from one point to another, was brought up to Georgia from its latest camping ground on the Tombigbee, and attached to Bragg's force. The corps of Longstreet, or, if not exclusively his corps, a large force from the army of Gen. Lee, was hastened westward from Virginia, and combined with Bragg's and Johnston's armies. The considerable force under Buckner, which retreated from East Tennessee, before Gen. Burnside, was consolidated with the rest, and doubtless all the other detachments of infantry and cavalry that have been roaming and operating throughout the Southwest, were hastened forward at the critical moment to the critical point. With all these bodies and reinforcements, a very large and formidable army was mustered to confront the Army of the Cumberland.

The rebels began the attack on Rosecrans' army, the lines of which were established along Chickamauga Creek, a short distance south of Chattanooga, shortly before noon on Saturday. They adopted the style of tactics which they have so often practiced with success—massing their troops, and attacking with fury, in succession, the different corps of our army, forcing its wings and centre. In each attack they seem to have been temporarily successful, but only temporarily, for, at nightfall, our lines were reestablished as they had been before the battle began, and Gen. Rosecrans held his ground, having severely punished the rebels.

Gen. Rosecrans has telegraphed to Washington that he anticipated that the battle would be renewed yesterday, and another dispatch represents our men as in the best of spirits and eager to begin the fight anew. The rebels, undoubtedly, attacked on Saturday with the whole of their force, as this is the policy which they have universally pursued, when they had the initiative in the action, and their failure in the first day augurs ill for their success yesterday. There has been no instance in the war in which the rebels, foiled in the first day of the battle, retrieved their fortunes on the day succeeding. And they were even less likely than usual to succeed on this occasion against the hero who, at Murfreesboro, wrenched victory from the very jaws of defeat.

Railroad Facilities to the Suburban Districts.—We understand that the Hudson River Railroad Company intend to lay a third track from this City to Yonkers for the exclusive use of persons traveling between those two points. It is also designed to have trains run each way every half hour and to be drawn by dummy engines to Chambers-street. We cannot help thinking that both the Harlem and New-Haven roads would consult their own interest, as they would certainly promote that of the public, by adopting a similar system. Hitherto neither of these roads has given any special attention to the development of that kind of local business which depends for its growth on a close and constant connection with the City. Every railroad leading into London takes special pains to give every possible facility to persons who wish to live out of the City while doing business in it. They all run trains every half hour, and some of them at certain times of the day even oftener. The result is that the whole region for twenty or thirty miles around London is simply a suburb of the metropolis, and the roads reap the benefit of the enormous business they have thus created. To a certain extent the Hudson River Railroad has done the same thing. As the facilities it has afforded have increased year after year, the region traversed by it has become more and more densely settled, and the local business thus developed has increased in magnitude and in profit. To such an extent is this true, that more than three-fourths of the enormous increase in business which the road has experienced during the present season, has taken place in its local traffic,—and as this is never to any great degree affected by great questions of public policy, it is evidently by far the most stable and desirable portion of the business of any road. The section of country bordering the Sound and the region traversed by the Harlem road, though differing in the nature of their attractions from that upon the Hudson River, have a beauty of their own which meets the taste and the wants of many people even better still; and if the Railroad Companies would take equal pains with the Hudson River road to facilitate access to them, we do not see why they should not be built up and settled with equal rapidity.

Important Decision.—We publish this morning a decision of Judge Nelson, sitting in the United States Circuit Court, at Cooperstown, in a habeas corpus case, which is of interest and importance to all the Boards of Enrolling Officers, and to all who may appear before them. It seems that a drafted man was claimed to be exempt as the elected son of a widow, and on application to the Board of Enrollment the claim was allowed, and an endorsement to that effect was made on the papers, and the man was declared by the Board to be exempt. Some days after, however, they reconsidered the claim and disallowed it and held the man. The case was brought before Judge Nelson, and he decided that the Board having once made a decision in the case, had exhausted its powers and its further action was void. He accordingly discharged the man.

It is important that all Enrolling Boards should bear this decision in mind and govern themselves accordingly. It is all the more important since the suspension of the habeas corpus. That suspension is an unpleasant thing, and we trust the Enrolling Boards, and all officers of the Government, will do everything in their power to make it as little burdensome as possible.

NEWS FROM WASHINGTON.

SPECIAL DISPATCH FROM WASHINGTON.

Washington, Sunday, Sept. 20.

LEE'S ARMY.

There is no doubt that Longstreet's corps has gone South. Lee's present force is estimated by general officers at not over 30,000 or 40,000 men, stretching from the Rapidan River to Charlottesville. Deserters say Longstreet took with him about 18,000 men.

A CAVALRY EXPEDITION.

Yesterday a portion of Gen. Buford's command swam the Rapidan in the neighborhood of Raccoon Ford. The expedition returned safely with a considerable number of prisoners. An Indiana cavalryman coming across five rebels boldly charged upon the party and succeeded in capturing a rebel Lieutenant and routing the others.

THE ANGLO-REBEL RAMS.

Private information received here from England by parties occupying high positions, is to the effect that the rebel rams will not be permitted to leave English ports unless accompanied by British war vessels, and the rams will not be allowed to mount guns. If allowed to sail at all, they will be taken to some French port, to be delivered to their real owners, who are Frenchmen.

GUERRILLA OPERATIONS.

The guerrillas profit by every movement of our army. They watch every opportunity with eagle eyes. No sooner had our old camps become vacant than the guerrillas pounced upon the sutlers and stragglers remaining. On Thursday a band of forty robbed a party of sutlers and citizens at a house four miles from Bealeton Station of $4,000 in money and $6,000 in goods. They took gold watches, valuables and even the hats off their victims' heads, and then dashed such relics as a mother's miniature into the mud with vile curses. The same day a party of eight came down to the railroad between Bristol and Catlett's Station, and captured three sutlers' wagons which were passing along, right from under the noses of the railroad guard. The country on both sides of Manassas Junction is now thoroughly infested with guerrillas, or rather citizens turned highway robbers.

AN AMBASSADOR FROM MEXICO.

Gen. Corzas, a prominent Liberal in Mexico, arrived in the city yesterday, on a special and important mission from the Juarez authorities to the Government here, and presented his credentials at the State Department to-day. Mr. Corzas does not replace Señor Romero, who is still the representative of the Juarez Government at Washington, although now temporarily absent in Mexico.

Señor Companeno, the Peruvian Minister at Mexico, is expected in this City in a day or two. He received his passports from the Forey Junta, accompanied with a request to leave the City of Mexico in twenty-four hours.

THE CAVALRY HORSES.

It is no more than justice to the Cavalry Bureau, and its efficient chief, Gen. Stoneman, to say that no horses have as yet been purchased by that office. The horses which are now being issued are those purchased under old contracts from "carrion dealers," and if they are worthless, as represented, it is no fault of the Cavalry Bureau. All the old stock, including large numbers of horses scattered through Maryland on pasturage, will be issued before fresh purchases are made.

RECEIPTS FROM CUSTOMS IN NEW-YORK.

From the 1st to the 12th of September, inclusive, the following amounts were received at the New-York Custom-house:

From duties on imports	$3,156,976 71
From duties on tonnage	19,412 34
From fines	7,410 30
From hospital money	1,005 20
From storage	6,030 45
From additional duties	242 89
Total	$3,184,084 79

James S. Gibbons, the active and assiduous Chief Clerk of the Agricultural Department, has gone North for a short vacation.

William A. Nugent, of Indiana, has been appointed Commissary, with the rank of Captain.

THE NEW NATIONAL BANK NOTES.

It is expected that the new National Bank notes will be ready for delivery by the 15th of October. The 5s and 10s are being printed by the Continental Engraving Company, and the 100s and 50s by the American Company.

GEN. HAUPT.

The simple statement that this officer has been relieved and his commission revoked, is calculated to give an incorrect impression. Important private interests demand a portion of his time, and he has therefore uniformly declined to accept the commission of Brigadier-General which was tendered him. Being informed by the Secretary of War, that unless he sent in his acceptance by a given time the position which he held would be considered vacated, he was still compelled to decline, and expressed a wish to retire. He was therefore relieved by the Secretary.

THE TERRITORY OF DACOTAH.

The annual report of the Surveyor General of Dacotah Territory has been received at the General Land office. The settlement of the Territory being in a measure retarded, in view of apprehended Indian disturbances, it has been suggested that a military force be located at different points within the Territory until the settlers of the frontier region are in sufficient numbers to protect themselves.

SICK AND WOUNDED REGULARS.

A special order of the War Department directs that the sick and wounded men of the regiments named below, and those who may hereafter require medical treatment, be forwarded to the posts herein indicated, viz.:

The Second, Third, Fourth, Sixth, Seventh, Eighth, Ninth and Tenth U. S. Infantry, to Fort Columbus, New-York.

The First U. S. artillery, serving in the Army of the Potomac, Department of Virginia and North Carolina, Department of the South, and the Department of the Gulf, to Fort Independence, Boston Harbor.

The Second U. S. artillery, serving as above, to Fort McHenry, Baltimore, Md.

The Third U. S. artillery, serving as above, to Fort Trumbull, Connecticut.

The Fourth U. S. artillery, serving as above, to Fort Washington, Maryland.

The Fifth U. S. artillery, serving as above, to Fort Hamilton, New-York.

The First, Second, Fifth and Sixth U. S. cavalry, to Carlisle Barracks, Pennsylvania.

The regular regiments serving in the Department of the Cumberland, to Camp Chase, Ohio.

The regular regiments serving in the Department of the Tennessee, to Newport Barracks, Kentucky.

The Eleventh U. S. infantry, to Fort Independence, Boston Harbor.

The Twelfth U. S. infantry, to Fort Hamilton, New-York Harbor.

The Fourteenth U. S. infantry, to Fort Trumbull, Connecticut.

The Seventeenth U. S. infantry, to Fort Preble, Maine.

DISPATCHES TO THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.

Washington, Sunday, Sept. 20.

THE "GOVERNMENT BANK."

It is proper that the public should be cautioned against bills purporting to be upon the "Government Bank," which unprincipled persons are attempting to put into circulation. They are dated at Washington, and purporting to be payable on demand, and being of a greenish color they are liable to be mistaken by the unwary for the old issue of United States notes, most of which have been redeemed and canceled by the Treasury Department. It is said that they have been passed quite extensively about New-York. No such bank exists. An office with the sign "Government Bank" over the door was some time ago closed by the Provost-Marshal of the War Department.

TREASURY NOTES UNDER A FIERY ORDEAL.

Since the conflagration at Lawrence, Kansas, eight or nine packages of notes have been sent to the Treasury to be exchanged for others. They had been subjected to the fire, but were not injured beyond identification. It seems that the chemicals employed on these notes form a coating which affords a partial protection from fire.

CONCERNING THE POSTAGE CURRENCY.

It has been ascertained that of the 50 cent postage currency there are nine different counterfeits, of the 25s and 10s two each, and of the 5s one. Besides this there is much mutilation of this currency, the fragments of which are pasted together and used by those whose gains would be at least equal if their labor was devoted to honest toil.

The present postage currency is coming into the Treasury at the rate of $50,000 per day; and about two millions of the twenty millions of dollars issued have already been received. The fifty and twenty-five cent notes will be withdrawn, and the new and improved issues will soon begin to take their place. The withdrawal of the fives and tens will be more gradual. All the notes returned are counted in the Treasurer's office, put in packages of ten dollars, and then cut in halves by a machine; subsequently each parcel of halves is counted by different persons; thus the pile receives three different countings. All precautions against errors are adopted. About thirty young ladies, together with male clerks, are employed at this business, under the direction of Gen. Spinner, the Treasurer of the United States, whose efficiency and application are extraordinary, and who has been known to work during last year seventeen hours per day, with only occasional deviations.

DEPREDATIONS OF GUERRILLAS.

Guerrillas still infest the southern side of the Potomac, occasionally capturing sutlers' property. Such was the case on Thursday, when thirteen horses and three full wagons, together with five men, fell into the hands of fifteen uniformed guerrillas, commanded by Capt. Somervillow, while on the way from Catlett's to Bristow Station. These teams had become separated from the few others in the train, when the robbers suddenly approached from the woods, and, with pistol in hand, seized and drove them beyond the possibility of capture. A negro driver was fired at three times by one of the desperadoes, but escaped unhurt, owing to his activity in dodging the shots. A Lieutenant being with the train, and in proximity to the guerrillas, after exchanging pistol discharges with them, ran off for assistance, and while he was returning, at the head of a portion of infantry of the railroad guard, the guerrillas quickly mounted their horses and left the scene of plunder. This conduct of the United States officer saved another valuable team which the rebels had prepared to steal, and were in the act of driving away. The five prisoners have returned, having been stripped of nearly all their clothing, including their hats and boots. The only safety to sutlers is with a cavalry guard.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY HARRINGTON.

Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Harrington has left Washington to embark for Europe, he having obtained two months additional leave of absence. This trip is in no manner connected with public business, but solely for the benefit of his health, which has been impaired by close application to business night and day. The gentlemen connected with the department yesterday afternoon took farewell of this truly efficient officer.

During his absence, Mr. Hazelet, Chief Clerk of the Treasury Department, will assume the duties of the position.

THE FUNDS ON BOARD THE RUSH.

The Treasurer of the United States has recently received additional evidence that the two millions for the pay of Gen. Grant's army were actually on board the steamer Rush at the time of the fire. Much of the money has been recovered in a charred condition, and a commission has been appointed to extend the search for the portion still missing.

MEDICAL ORDERS.

Surgeon-General's Office,
Washington City, D. C., Sept. 18, 1863.

Circular No. 16.—The attention of all Medical Directors is especially called to paragraph 109, Revised United States Regulations, and section 2, General Orders, No. 96, dated Headquarters of the Army, Adjutant-General's Office, Nov. 13, 1861, in regard to the disposition to be made of "insane soldiers."

No insane soldier can be discharged the service on Surgeon's certificate of disability.

JOS. K. BARNES, Acting Surgeon-General.

Surgeon-General's Office,
Washington City, D. C., Sept. 14, 1863.

Circular No. 17.—Medical Directors are hereby instructed that, in obedience to an order from the War Department, all enlisted men of the regular regiments, excepting Hospital Stewards, now employed in hospitals, must be at once sent to their respective regiments. By order,

CHAS. S. CRANE, Surgeon U. S. Army.

Note From the Spingler House.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

A statement appeared in this morning's Times regarding an alleged act of ill-treatment toward a maimed Union volunteer in the bar-room of the Spingler House. Having satisfied myself that there is no foundation for such a statement, I ask you to give this note as prominent a place in your journal as you gave the above-named article.

A scene such as represented would of course have been most disgraceful. No man could have witnessed it without a blush of shame.

The visitors of this place would most certainly be the last to sit in such an ungentlemanly and unmanly act—nor would the proprietor countenance it.

Respectfully yours, J. F. W.

Sunday, Sept. 20.

An Often Answered Query.

Catskill, Thursday, Sept. 17, 1863.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Will you be kind enough to inform me, through the columns of your paper, whether, if a person is drafted to serve in the United States service for three years, and pays $300, he is liable to be drafted again until the expiration of the three years.

Very respectfully, yours, W. H. R.

[We are in constant receipt of so many queries to the above effect that we may repeat again what we have already said, that there has been a decision of the Provost-Marshal-General to the effect that the payment of $300 does not exempt a person from the operation of a future draft, but the furnishing of a substitute does so exempt him.—Ed. Times.]

Mr. EDWIN BOOTH will commence an engagement at the Winter Garden in Hamlet, appearing on Tuesday in his usual character. A Hamlet, Ophelia and company has been secured for the purpose of meeting the requirements of the young tragedian. Mr. J. B. DAVENPORT has been appointed stage manager for a position which the composite nature demands for consistency. Mr. BOOTH's last engagement at this house was interrupted—it will be remembered—by a disagreeable exception that compelled him at once to seek rest and shelter in retirement. His return to the stage will, we are persuaded, be hailed with satisfaction by all true lovers of the drama.

Mr. FORRESTER will repeat his remarkably fine impersonation of Jacques in "As You Like It" on Friday, and, received, of course, with the usual cheer by the public. Mr. FORRESTER's repertoire is so extensive that he does not find it practicable to repeat any one piece more than a couple of times. House to-night is the last performance of "Othello."

Wallack's Theatre will open on the 26th; for the present it is closed. The Olympic (Mrs. Jean WEST's) is rapidly progressing toward completion, and will open about the same time.

The Park Theatre, of Brooklyn, appears to be a success in every point of view; the houses have been crowded and the pieces have been received with favor. To-night, FRANCK's extravagance entitled "Beauty and the Beast" will be revived, with new scenery, dressed, &c. The performances commence with the comedy of "Faint Heart Never Won Fair Lady."

At Barnum's Museum, the new Ghost piece called "Brunhilde" will be played day and night until further notice.

At the Alhambra Pavilion a new and remarkable artist on the trapeze, called Young Nassia, will make his debut to-day. He is the best of that kind we have yet had. Mlle. SOFIA SACSIE, who has recently been added to this company, is one of the most graceful and accomplished equestrianes in the world.

When the Stereopticon withdraws from Irving Hall, the City will have lost one of its most agreeable, legitimate and artistic sources of amusement. This event, we are sorry to learn, will take place on Saturday next—the Hall being required for Mr. GOTTSCHALK's concerts on the following Monday. We advise every one, without exception, to encourage the interest, and pay as many visits to the Stereopticon as possible. It is one of the few exhibitions that may be praised unqualifiedly.

Mme. MEDORI has arrived in this City from Europe, thereby completing Mr. MAPLESON's admirable troupe for the coming season, which will open on Monday, the 28th, with DONIZETTI's opera of "Roberto Devereux." The lady is in fine health and spirits, regarding New-York with especial favor as the scene of some of her best triumphs. A serenade was gotten up in her honor by the band of the Academy of Music, at which several fire companies took part. What mystic relation is there between a red shirt and a prima donna that the two on such occasions are invariably found together?

AGNES ROBERTSON (Mrs. DION BOUCICAULT) will visit this country on a professional tour during the present Winter. She opens in Boston for four weeks on Dec. 28; follows at Philadelphia for two weeks on Jan. 25, and at Baltimore and Washington on Feb. 8 for four weeks. The lady leaves England on Oct. 14, and will endeavor to play in New-York previous to entering on any of the above engagements. It is doubtful, however, if she will be able to find an establishment suitable for her purpose, or where there are yet vacancies in the list of "stars." It is said that Mrs. BOUCICAULT will come provided with a new drama by her husband.

The steamer Hammonia, from Hamburg, due to-day, will bring the members of Mr. ANSCHUTZ' new German opera company. The following is a list of the principal artists: Tenor robusto, Mr. HIEBER, from Berlin; Lyric tenor, Mr. HALLES, from Brunswick; Basso, Mr. RENE, from Vienna; Buffo Basso, Mr. HAIMER, from Vienna; Soprani, Mmes. HIEBER-FRANZIONI, from Berlin; Mme. JOHANSEN, Soubrette, Mlle. FAULER CARSSAI, from Vienna, and Mlle. LANG, from Pesth. In the second parts Mdc. BERRAN and Mlle. DAGES will lend their assistance, and Messrs. GRAFF and KROEHNE have been added to the male forces. There will be a full ballet under the direction of Mr. DEMMESMANN, new scenery from the brush of a celebrated European artist, whose name is NICOLA MESSRA, and an entirely new wardrobe by J. SCHLOSSER. We have already spoken of the chorus. It is one of the best in point of precision that we have ever had in this City. The orchestra will, of course, be up to the highest standard. Mr. ANSCHUTZ will give two or three performances in this City during the coming week, for the purpose of introducing his principal artists. He will then proceed to Baltimore, Washington, Philadelphia and Boston, returning to New-York in December. His season in the Metropolis will run through three months, and will be characterized by the greatest activity.

Mr. BANDMANN, the German tragedian, will play on Wednesday of the present week, instead of Tuesday—his regular night. Mr. FORBES has very kindly consented to change nights with Mr. B., in order to accommodate that gentleman.

Mr. COOKE, the veteran orchestra conductor, goes to the Winter Garden to fill the post recently vacated by Mr. E. MELLENAUER, who has accepted the position of conductor at Wallack's Theatre.

Mr. ROBERT STOEPEL, the well-known composer, has resigned his office as chief of Mr. WALLACK's orchestra. The loss is one which a less elegant establishment could better afford. Mr. STOEPEL's powers were far beyond any of the trivial requisites of a theatre, but in the incidental music that he supplied to Mr. WALLACK he displayed a facility that was as graceful as it was unpretentious. At a time when the City was infested with conductors whose sole ambition was to make noise and invent vulgarities, he persisted in maintaining the highest possible standard of incidental music, and resisted, with the feeling of a thorough musician, all extraneous means of producing a little cheap applause. His original pieces and arrangements were characterized by freshness and thorough knowledge of the legitimate resources of the various instruments at his command. He was incapable of writing trash, and hence he was by no means a "sensation" conductor; but the select few, who in such matters constitute the only public opinion worth consulting, knew that his highest trifle was meritorious in every art sense, and very different from what could be found elsewhere. The orchestra at Wallack's indeed was an exception to all other orchestras, and we shall be greatly mistaken if Mr. STOEPEL's resignation does not for the future deprive it of this distinction. In the meantime it may be interesting to the public to hear that the lyric poem of "Hiawatha" by Mr. STOEPEL will shortly be produced at Irving Hall, with grand orchestra and chorus. MADILDA HEMES will recite LONGFELLOW's poem.

Mr. E. J. DE CORDOVA whose humorous lectures have become as essential to the season as any of the other comforts of life, has effected a settlement this year at Irving Hall, and will commence a series of entertainments there so soon as the weather is growing cool enough to enable the public to stand them.

Artemus Ward, the well-known humorist and lecturer, leaves for California by the overland route the first week in October. A golden ghost, it is said, has beckoned him to the auriferous regions.

Suggestions for the Orleds.

CASE DEZ, on FIFTH-AVENUE, September, 1863.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

"Veteran Observer," of the "Benches," has furnished some good reading for your paper. For logic and polish I will not attempt to emulate him, but for logical deductions and effective hits, I claim to rank him even in this my first attempt at paragraph gymnastics.

A Review.—The Jeff. Davis crew went into convention for the purpose of cursing and cursing Slavery. This is admitted by both North and South. The destruction of Slavery is the consequence. Slavery was a mill institution; it is now among the dissolving views. Thus manifest destiny works out the very reverse to what aspiring men had planned.

2. Blessed and Praise combined to destroy the growth and power of this country, by giving and continuing to the rebellion, and the European powers of the unwashed hordes of the Old Country have so often informed the world that the United States was divided, broken up, &c., that we may expect to see several merchant other Bingerman among us, to rule over us with the spring campaign.

3. Mexican cannon balls received all human calculation. This country has had longer to wield its power, and it appears to me a war will soon sing-song old matter in what quarter heat is store for us. Mexican cannon balls may be considered. The mass of Mexico have evidently implied Heaven in siding with the rebellion, and retribution is, or will be, their reward.

This is the one of twenty (double 10th) planned results.

4. The Conservent Democrats of this State thought, or pretended to think, that to preserve State Rights it was necessary to make political war on the National Government. What is the result? The General Government is now in a better position, and, in fact, every grade of society, except the Conservent class, are glad that no United States soldiers are making a Government more too strong for any Conservent comfort. It was not necessary that we should come here; but short-sighted political hacks set up the cry that no Federal power was to be tolerated in the Sunrise land. Have the Conservents received or have they changed "State Rights," and will they now let us depart for the rest of war, or will they make it necessary that we be here, here? In short, will they be blind and mad enough to force the Government to override local organization in self-defense? In doing so Gov. SEWARD and his crew would be no bluder nor madder than Jeff. DAVIS was in not take a war to preserve the institution of Slavery.

In a great many smaller things man's judgments have been reversed. The very opposite of their calculations is now matter of history. I have said enough to set even "Commanders-in-Chief" in a brown study.

You will hear from me again if Camp DIX, on Fifth-avenue, does not strike for home and march away before long.

SURGICAL AND PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS

ON THE

DISEASES OF THE EAR,

WITH THE

NEW MODE OF TREATING DEAFNESS

TO WHICH IS ADDED AN APPENDIX,

Containing a Treatise on Catarrh and the New System of Treating it.

BY J. H. VON EISENBERG, M. D.

of No. 616 Broadway.

Having thus generally described the diseases to which this exquisitely formed organ is liable—and which are the destruction of the necessary performance of those functions which we find available for all the purposes for which that organ was constructed in the economy of nature. Young people seldom discover that they hear imperfectly until about the age of puberty, or when they begin to use the organ of hearing in earnest. Many persons reach the age of thirty or forty years before they have any notion that they are deaf. They may have suspected that they did not hear across the street, or the minister, or at the theatre, quite as plainly as other people, and they are surprised to find that their neighbors hear every word and they do not. Then they become conscious that they do not hear as well as everybody; but they had no idea that they were the subjects of any defect in their hearing, or that their hearing could be improved.

Although deafness is, in general, gradual in its progress, manifesting itself about the period of puberty, and increasing from that period up to twenty or twenty-five years of age, yet instances occasionally occur of the impediment in hearing existing in children, or of the sudden loss of the hearing of a grown-up person who had previously heard distinctly of an ordinary distance. When children, about the period of being sent to school, are supposed not to catch sounds quite as quickly as they should, we should then make a careful examination of the organ, so as to find the cause why the sound, in conveying information to the Sensorium, is impeded. It is a vulgar error that an imperfect hearing is, by age, rendered better calculated to hear at a distance than it was in youth. This opinion appears to have been built on the following false analogy—viz.: that those who possess an ordinarily good hearing become, from some of those changes in the structure of the organ of hearing which we have before pointed out, more acute as they approached old age, which is a well-established fact. But this change is a sure indication of the total loss of hearing, as the acoustic apparatus is then so delicate that it receives the sound quickly, with a vibration concentrated by the auricle, which conveys the sound to the Membrane Tympani. There are facts enough to prove that if we even do possess the power of removing the disease, so that the hearing faculty may resume its normal functions, yet the reproduction of the parts by nature already destroyed by the disease is, in mature years, uncertain and slow, as the reparative power is greater, most particularly in the organ of which I am treating, in the young than in those individuals of more advanced years. Even when we compare patients that have all attained their highest development and growth, this seems to be natural. We know it from general observations of the results of injuries from some diseases of the Ear in persons of advanced ages; numerous as the exceptions may be, as a general rule it appears true.

All these facts agree well with the belief that the formative power is gradually diminished in the acts of organizing matter for the maintenance of the function of perfect hearing, and the difference between the completeness of reproduction of injured parts in children and that in adults appears as much greater than the difference in adults of different ages, that it is probable the formative power is more diminished by growth than it is by the mere maintenance. To reproduce an injured part requires perfection of formative power. The best example we can give to illustrate that early attention to the slightest impediment in hearing should not be neglected or deferred, is the following, from a lecture delivered at the Royal College of Surgeons of England, by Prof. JAMES PAGET. He says: "That he removed an arterial erectile tumor from the External Ear, which occupied the adjacent subcutaneous tissues and part of the scalp. The back of the Auricle, and nearly the whole extent, was pushed by a superficial swelling." It is manifest, according to this eminent anatomist's own illustration, that it could have been easily removed if it had been treated and removed in an earlier stage, for he further states that—"This disease had been noticed like a very small pimple, when the patient was young. It had, from that time, regularly increased. The tumor was gorged with blood, consisting of small vessels collected in a soft, spongy mass. This was especially observed in the auricular artery." Another similar case the same learned professor speaks of as being recorded by Mr. COOPER, being also a large tumor of the Ear. We may trace half of the deaf in this country to the want of being cheated by early attention, when a little care will do it. Indeed, after looking into a vast number of volumes from the pens of the experienced and skillful medical writers, my opinion is confirmed, that if attention were paid in infancy to the slightest defect in hearing, we should have none of those obstinate, or incurable cases which sometimes baffle the most skillful Aurist. I have no hesitation in stating that it is our bounden duty to instill into the minds of those who wish to enjoy the happy privilege of hearing, that it is absolutely necessary for deaf persons never to suffer themselves to be scared away from social intercourse because they cannot participate in conversation with that facility which their more fortunate brethren enjoy.

The matchless course of unsurpassed beauty which the destroying hand of time has left us in the works of the mighty masters of the classic time, exhibit to us the finest specimens of the Ear. We are immediately struck with the delicacy with which the exterior Ear is organized, both for the conveyance of sound to the brain, and its protection from injury; as well as an exquisite addition to the face, which would otherwise appear long and monotonous. Its shell-like, undulating form, seems to have been the result of the examination of the most perfect human models; but we must not forget, altogether, the HAND which made the sound organ upon whose perfect organization depends much of the happiness of man; and, mean a mechanic friend, who could unlock this most wonderful little organ, he would be a subject of much surprise and admiration; and he would be rewarded for his skill and ingenuity. We are lost in our conceptions of admiration of the wondrous mechanism of the accomplished anatomist. We quit the opera-house with a feeling of joy, and the song we hear most will seem to ring in our Ears; but we forget the marvelous construction of the little fabric which conveys to us the extraordinary performance. If we derive so much delightful pleasure from the perfection of this little organ, how much more should we not when we are unfortunate enough to be deprived of its pleasing and useful functions? We, therefore, think it is our duty, right to endeavor to take every precaution for its preservation and perfection.

To give the course of the disease which I have enumerated, there are many maladies upon which the auditory function is subject, to death. If I may become the means only of arresting the attention to proper precautions, thereby avoiding many of those life-long sufferings to which the deaf are subject, I would consider the time I have employed in compiling these sheets not thrown away, nor regret that I have returned to become an author.

THE EAR.

Hunt says "that the shape of the Auricle is well adapted to receive and concentrate sounds, and direct them to the meatus." It is supposed that, from this circumstance, the tyrant Dionysius, of Syracuse, had constructed a subterraneous cavern in a rock, in the form of the Human Ear, which measured eighty feet in height and two hundred and fifty-feet in length. The sounds of this cave were necessarily directed to a common symposium, communicating with an adjoining room, where Dionysius spent the greater part of his time to listen to whatever was said by those whom his suspicions and cruelty had confined in the apartments above.

AN EXCURSION TO LABRADOR.—The schooner Nelly Baker arrived here this morning from Labrador, with a party consisting of eighteen, who left this city eight weeks ago on a pleasure trip in Labrador. Capt. CHRIS. BOWDEN, of Marine Point, commander of the expedition, and among the members of it are the well known artist, Mr. WM. BRADFORD, and Mr. CORNEMANN, the skilful photographer. Mr. BRADFORD—from whom we have received a brief account of the voyage—went, accompanied by Mr. CORNEMANN, for the purpose of obtaining earliest and photographic views of the scenery and of the natural scenery along the coast. They called up the Northwest River, and so far up the coast as 55 deg. North latitude. They met a number of Esquimaux, by whom they were kindly treated.

They also saw the Nectopie and Mountaineer Indians. Mr. BRADFORD considers the Nectopies by far the finest body of people they met. They succeeded in taking, with great success, a number of views of these people; also scenes descriptive of their mode of living. Mr. BRADFORD and Mr. CORNEMANN were peculiarly fortunate in their endeavors to secure copies of the Indians and scenery of Nipha, Hamilton Inlet, and Kamanistiquia, marked to a charm, and the impressions were obtained by Mr. CORNEMANN. The surrounding scenery, as surveyed from the Mealee Mountains, Mr. BRADFORD speaks of as indescribably grand. The success of their voyage had exceeded anything they had anticipated. The weather was thoroughly favorable for their purposes, and the artists made the most of every auspicious hour.

Mr. CORNEMANN is on well pleased with his trip that he contemplates upon another trip next year, when he has arranged to visit a number of points of interest in ascending the course of the Mackenzie Indians. He has brought back with him canoes, grains and many of the household utensils which he found in use among the Esquimaux Indians.—Boston Traveler, Sept. 18.

SMALL POX CURED.
SMALL POX CURED.
SMALL POX CURED.

Starting as this announcement may be, it is nevertheless true. Let not chagrin doubt, or refuse the proffered remedy, but rather hail this blessed medicine as a truth, until proved otherwise. This wonderful cure for Small Pox has been tried, in over one hundred cases and succeeded in every case. The cure is

DR. RADWAY'S REGULATING PILLS.

Their indication of cure is to draw the poison from the skin, blood, and other viscera, and purge it from the system through the bowels. By this means the patient is protected against pitting and eruptions of the skin. There are no other purgative pills or medicines that are safe to administer; in cases of Small Pox and other eruptive fevers; irritation and increased inflammation that a dose of the drastic pills would produce in these cases, and the weakness that would follow, would prove fatal. Radway's Pills will thoroughly purge, and at the same time heal and soothe all internal eruptions.

THE DEATH TRAIL.

The horrible trail of miseries that are entailed upon the small-pox patient, if he recovers under the usual treatment, are to be found in every form and variety of disease. Thousands of patients who have been treated for the cure of small-pox, were previously healthy, yet after their apparent cure found their systems involved in a series of difficulties. This is evidence of an imperfect cure of the original disease. Radway's Pills not only cure the patient of small pox, but will secure him against all further sickness. Price 25 cents per box.

Sold by RADWAY & CO., No. 87 Maiden-lane, corner of Gold-st., and by druggists generally.

AGAIN NEW TESTIMONY.

READ.

HARLEM, July 28, 1863.

I have been deaf for over TWENTY-FIVE YEARS, and Dr. VON EISENBERG operated on both of my ears without the slightest pain—a thing that I could not believe could be done. I now hear well, and feel as I never did for the last twenty years. The dexterity and skill with which the operation was performed argues the highest practical ability. I hear perfectly. It is now over a month since the operation, and I continue to feel as well as ever.

CATARRH CURED.

New-York, Aug. 22, 1863.

I have been suffering for the last three years from a severe Catarrh, with a constant dullness in my head, a tightness across my chest, a weight over my eyes, which were weak, watery and very painful. My nostrils were constantly obstructed with a pouring of fluid. I have had frequent coughing, hoarseness of my voice, generally attended with spitting, often with a fullness of my throat, together with a soreness and a dropping. Dr. VON EISENBERG has cured me of all these disagreeable sufferings. I have lost a new life. The treatment of Dr. VON EISENBERG is so skillful and so successful; it is impossible to overrate the benefit I have received at his hands. I heartily recommend any one suffering like myself to place themselves under Dr. VON EISENBERG's care, with a certainty of being speedily cured. I give this with great pleasure and pleasure. I remain forever again saying that my voice, which was hoarse and thick when I applied to Dr. VON EISENBERG, is now clear and good; indeed, I feel abundantly satisfied.
JAMES LITTLE,
No. 56 7th-st., New-York.

New-York, Sept. 8.

I have been suffering for years past from a severe Catarrh, with a great heaviness over my eyes, with a severe depression, great nervousness, and pain in my head, great difficulty in breathing, and a constant accumulation in my nostrils, which gave me sudden nights for several years. I have consulted several physicians, who pronounced me to be consumptive. When I suffered for so long a time is inexplicable. My system was entirely disorganized and greatly debilitated. I not only felt weak, but I had a cloud constantly before my eyes, and my ears were so affected that I was threatened with a total loss of hearing. I must say, I think, I was guided by Providence to come to Dr. VON EISENBERG, who not only cured me of my Catarrh by removing an astonishing quantity of disagreeable matter from my head, but he restored me to perfect health, a blessing I have not enjoyed for many years. Now I enjoy a good night's rest, and pursue my business with comfort. I must acknowledge that Dr. VON EISENBERG's mild and scientific treatment of the Catarrh deserves the highest commendation, as the principle which governs his system of curing Catarrh is such as to results success certain.
JAMES FURLONG, No. 322 3d-st.

No. 78 Allen-st., New-York, Feb. 5, 1863.

I have been constantly deaf in one ear, and partially so in the other, for about eighteen years, with a disagreeable discharge from both ears, attended with continual rumbling noise in the head, for which I have been treated by a most eminent practitioner in this City without the slightest relief.

I consulted Dr. VON EISENBERG, but I must candidly say that I had no faith in his success when I did so. It is, therefore, due to Dr. VON EISENBERG to acknowledge that I am entirely cured; also, that he displayed that skill and knowledge which have procured for him such an unmerited reputation. As I have had an opportunity of comparing his mode of treatment with that of others, I can truly state that it is not only superior, but the principle which directs his mode of treating the hearing ear, in my opinion, certain.
JOHN TAYLOR.

New-York, July 22, 1863.

This certifies that my mother has been for some time afflicted with partial deafness, suffering from pain, and rumbling noises in the head, together with other indications of a total loss of hearing. Dr. VON EISENBERG removed from her ears a great quantity of matter, together with congealed blood, relieving her immediately, and all without pain. His wife grateful thanks that I give this testimony to his skill.
CARROLL J. FOST, No. 38 Scott-st.

SIGHT RESTORED.

JUNE 26, 1863.

My daughter brought me to Dr. VON EISENBERG almost completely blind in both eyes. I could not hear the pain nor the light. I am completely cured by Dr. VON EISENBERG, and called now to express my gratitude to the Doctor for his skill and unremitting attention, by which I recovered one of the most precious senses to me after being deprived of it for four years. It is only due to Dr. VON EISENBERG to state that I have tried several physicians in vain. I shall be happy to bear personal testimony to Dr. VON EISENBERG's unrivaled success to any lady or gentleman who will call on me.

CHRONIC CATARRH CURED.

READ.

NEW-YORK, March 26, 1863.

"This is to certify, that I have suffered from what they pronounced CHRONIC CATARRH, with a dull heaviness in the head. I felt my voice completely arrested by continual sensations of the throat, the cavities seeming overcome with continual but fruitless efforts to clear the throat and nose, so much so, that every one thought I was consumptive. Having heard of the great cures performed by Dr. VON EISENBERG, I consulted him with but little hope of a cure. I am happy to be enabled to add my testimonial to the great number already in the Doctor's possession, as to his scientific and successful mode of treatment, as he has shown in my case that skill and knowledge which have procured for him so great a reputation. I am so entirely restored to perfect health that I do most cheerfully recommend all sufferers from CHRONIC CATARRH and SORE THROAT to apply at once to Dr. VON EISENBERG, with a certainty of being cured."

PRIVATE DISEASES CURED IN THE SHORTEST TIME.—Dr. WARD, No. 25 Liberty-st., near Broadway, New-York, continues to be consulted on the diseases of a private nature, which require immediate attention, and which, if neglected, or improperly treated, or cured by mercury, or other poisonous drugs, or by quacks, or by those who have not had the advantage of a regular medical education, or who have had more than all other practitioners put together, or who have tried in vain to be cured, or who have been deceived by those who promised a cure in a short time and failed, or who are afraid to trust, or who have been deceived by those who have failed, or who have spent their money in vain, or who think their case is too bad or too long standing to be cured, or who think that because others have failed to cure, or have made their disease worse by their treatment, that I can not cure them, or who, from any cause, are in doubt or fear, or who, from their peculiar circumstances, require secrecy and speedy cure, should consult Dr. Ward. Recent cases, of a few days' standing, are not always the easiest to cure, and many cases which have been neglected, or improperly treated, or cured by mercury, or other poisonous drugs, require more time and skill than others. Dr. Ward's long and extensive practice in the treatment of these diseases, and his success in curing cases which have been given up by others as incurable, should be a sufficient guarantee to those who require his services. Dr. Ward's Private Medical Instructions to the Married and those about to marry, containing valuable information, and the best means of restoring health when lost by improper indulgence or by disease, sent by mail free of charge. Dr. Ward's Pamphlet on Nervous Debility, Seminal Weakness, Impotency, Spermatorrhœa, Syphilis, Gonorrhœa, Gleet, Stricture, Diseases of the Urinary Organs, Diseases of the Skin, Blood and Bones, Scrofula, Rheumatism, Piles, Rupture, Diseases of the Eye and Ear, Diseases of the Lungs, Liver, Stomach and Bowels, Consumption, Dyspepsia, Diseases of the Heart, Nervous Affections, Fits, Epilepsy, Spasms, Tremblings, Sleeplessness, Loss of Memory, Loss of Sight, Premature Decay, Loss of Power, Loss of Flesh, Pimples on the Face, Blotches, Ulcers, Sore Throat, Swellings, Tumors, Cancers, Diseases of the Urinary Organs, Diseases of the Bladder and Kidneys, Gravel, Dropsy, Diseases of the Sexual Organs of the Male and Female, Latest Researches in Physiology, European Medical Works, Consultations, Advice and Medicine, from 9 A.M. to 9 P.M. daily. AFFAIRS IN THE SOUTHWEST.

Interesting from Vicksburgh—Movement of Troops—The Navigation of the River Uninterrupted—Guerrillas in West Tennessee.

Special Correspondence of the N. Y. Times Republican.

MEMPHIS, Monday, Sept. 14.

By the Metropolitan, arrived from below, we are confirmed in the report of the movement of troops to New-Orleans. The Thirteenth army corps, Major-General Ord commanding, has moved down the river; the ultimate destination is of course a secret. Rumors are still rife of an expedition to the Rio Grande, but it cannot be contemplated to send all spare troops which are between New-Orleans and Vicksburgh to that point. We adhere to the destination being Mobile, via Pascagoula.

Gen. SHERMAN, who commands at Vicksburgh, has notified the guerrillas who hover around our picket lines on the Big Black, that unless they confine themselves to the usages of civilized warfare, he will be obliged to retaliate by laying waste the country beyond that stream. It appears that certain bands of guerrillas have been prowling around shooting at our picquets in a murderous manner.

Many boats are detained at Vicksburgh, and a very considerable movement of troops is expected thence. Fifteen hundred sick and furloughed troops crowded on board the Metropolitan. Twelve hundred of them were put off with the cheering consolation that there would not be another boat for four days.

Nothing was learned relative to the affairs in Arkansas later than the last arrival. The latest advices, though not entirely reliable, are by persons who are coming into Memphis to make purchases. According to them, our forces are approaching the rebel fortifications at Bayou Metoe. Skirmishing was going on, and a great battle expected, in which it is needless to say, the rebels would be whipped.

In other fact, we are a good deal in the dark about matters so near as Frank's army. One impression common here is that Smith is holding for reinforcements. Another that Gen. Price's rebels are falling back to Arkadelphia and the Upper Red River. I can but regret, after reasonable endeavor, the utter absence of anything satisfactory in regard to that army. Persons in Memphis have been thirty miles out from Duvall's Bluff within the last ten days; they report great suffering and much sickness in the army.

Every one must be astonished at the comparative quiet with which the steamers pass up and down the river without any of the threatened guerrilla firing. There is no considerable body of the enemy near the river bank. The activity of our troops, seconded, no doubt, by the Marquette Road and the Martha brigade, has had the most cheering intimidating effect. But one or two boats have been fired on in a month, and then with slight casualties.

We regret that we cannot record equal success on the part of the troops in Gen. HURLBUT's district. Guerrillas are roving all over West Tennessee almost unchecked. We still continue to run trains to Corinth, but the importation of cotton is stopped by a very close rebel police established immediately round the city. They come close up to our pickets and exasperate citizens, and conscript, rob and maltreat them. There seems to be no reason why these bands should not be put down. The people remaining in the interior are either too old and constitutionally indisposed to fight for rebellion, or they are desirous that the Union should triumph. All of them are desirous for a state of peace. But they are neither encouraged to arm to disperse these gangs themselves, nor are the United States troops assigned to the service.

Persons are reported to have arrived in town recently from Mobile, Selma and Charleston. If their reports are to be relied on, Mobile will not give up without much of a fight. JOHNSTON has gone thence to Atlanta, where he commands in person. His army, which was near Jackson, has gone after him and the Gulf coast is left bare of troops. BRAGG is in disgrace, while BEAUREGARD is entrusted with the defense of Mobile.

Rumors are rife in the Southwest that an alliance offensive and defensive has been entered into between Mexico and the South. Great expectations are laid upon the ram fleet, which is soon to fall upon our blockading fleet and destroy it piecemeal.

The new line of the rebel defence seems to be in general terms defined by the Coosa and Tombigbee Rivers. Mobile, which is very strong on the sea side, is quite vulnerable by land, and would fall by the same tactics as did Vicksburgh.

The guerrillas in Arkansas and West Louisiana, thanks to Gen. BANKS' efforts, have been completely silenced. Persons from Lake Providence report that the black troops have not been molested of late.

From New-Mexico.

THE CARSON EXPEDITION—DEPREDATIONS OF THE NAVAJOES.

We learn from the Santa Fé papers that at last accounts from the Navajo country, Col. CARSON's expedition was making good progress. While near the Moqui villages, in the western part of the Territory, he encountered a band of Navajoes, killing twelve men, and capturing thirty women and children; also these hundred horses and a large flock of sheep. After the battle, KONZAZUM, the Utah Chief, and his men left Col. CARSON, and arrived at Fort Defiance, (now Fort Canby,) on the 13th ult. He claimed that he and his men, having done the killing and capturing, were entitled to the horses, &c., and said that Col. CARSON having refused to let him have them, he concluded to leave and go home. However valuable these people may be as guides and spies, it is not to be presumed that Col. CARSON would allow them to dictate to him the terms upon which the prisoners and stock captured should be disposed of.

The command was in pursuit of another party of Indians when the Ute Chief left. It is supposed that the larger part of the Navajoes are in the country where Col. CARSON is operating.

In the more southern portion of the Territory the Navajoes occasionally make their appearance with booty stolen from the settlements. These occasions give rise to exciting pursuits on the part of the volunteers stationed there, which develop and manifest their capacity and fitness for Indian fighting. We will here direct attention to one of these pursuits, which was conducted by Capt. HENRY A. GASSE, First Infantry California Volunteers, from Fort McRea, on the 8th ult. With a small body of men (twenty in number) mounted on wagon mules, he followed the Indians for five days through a desert country, and finally overtook them among the mountains, the numerous caverns of which afforded the opportunities to escape without being drawn into a conflict with the Captain and his men. But the booty was recovered. About 1,000 sheep were recovered and returned to Fort Craig.

The difficulties in the way of hunting up the enemy in that country (as in all wild countries) are, however, very great. As showing this, Maj. WINGATE reports that with one hundred and thirty men he spent twelve days, and traveled two hundred and eighty miles, in the direction of Zuni, accomplishing nothing beyond the arrest of a Navajo man, though he was satisfied there were bands roving through the region he traversed.

The Santa Fé Gazette of the 29th says: "Major WALLER, Inspector-General of the Department, leaves for Denver City to-day, accompanying his family that far on their way to the East. On the Major's return to Fort Union, he will enter on a tour of inspecting all forces that point in Fort Bascom, Sumner and Stanton to Santa Fé."—St. Louis Republican, 19th.

Letter from a Union Prisoner in Fort Sumter.

The Easton Express publishes the following letter from Assistant-Engineer HAMMAY, of Easton, who was one of the naval expedition that undertook to storm Fort Sumter, and was made a prisoner. He writes as follows to his parents:

FORT SUMTER, CHARLESTON, S. C., Wednesday, Sept. 9, 1863.

MY DEAR PARENTS: You may be surprised to receive a letter from me dated from this place of "brick and mortar," but so it is. An expedition was fitted out to assault and carry the fort. We reckoned without our host, for in place of we taking, we were taken. The way it was is this: At about 4:30 P. M., Capt. WALKER collected the different boats comprising the expedition. Among the number were two boats from the Housatonic. I volunteered to go in the one commanded by Lieut. BROWER, (the other was in command of M. M. SOUTER.) We immediately proceeded toward the flagship, when I found that our party was in the third division, and commanded by the Flag-Lieut. S. W. PRESTON. We were towed within a hundred yards of the fort and cast adrift. We then formed line and proceeded toward Sumter. When within fifty yards of the fort we were hailed and fired upon by the sentinel. We gave a yell and pitched in in good style—but it was no go. All of Capt. WALKER's, one of Lieut. BROWER's (our boat) and one from Lieut. HENRY's division were all cast loose. The Others, about eighteen, continued firing their pieces and skedaddled. We, who landed, quickly formed under Capt. WALKER, (I as Lieutenant,) and tried "to rush up the rocks"—but it was no go. We tried to do what we volunteered to do, but could not; so we got in one of the many indentures made in the walls by Gen. GILLMORE, and came to the conclusion it would be best for us to surrender, which we did. Our men behaved nobly, and we are now prisoners of war. Some of our party received letters from those who were among the skedaddlers wishing they were with us. As all events we all done what we volunteered to do, which was to get inside of Fort Sumter, (although prisoners.) The officers in command here are perfect gentlemen, and treat us as brave men, which we showed we were in our three successive attempts up the side of the fort. Not a man grumbled, but all rushed towards the parapet with the intention of either placing the flag on its walls or falling in the attempt. Very fortunately only four were killed and about sixteen wounded. I, as usual, am one of the lucky ones, escaping without a scratch. The scene after we landed I will try to describe at another time, it was fearful as well as amusing.

Yours affectionately, J. E. H.

FOUND DROWNED.—CORONER BURNETT held an inquest on Peter Hamilton yesterday upon the body of a man found lying on the beach, Fire Island. He was about 30 years old, had red hair, black hair, whiskers under the chin, and was dressed in gray striped pants, gray mixed fine jacket, plaid flannel overshirt, and pearls boots. The jury rendered the verdict, "Found drowned."

"Democracy Bearing to Hard."

LETTER FROM THURLOW WEED.

From the Albany Evening Journal.

In April I warned the Democracy of Connecticut of a extent which was realized. For reasonable reasons the Union strength of that State was then so much impaired, that the Democracy might have carried it easily. But, looking both sense and patriotism, it adopted a "Copperhead" Platform, and was beaten.

On the 12th of August I reiterated that warning to the Democracy of Maine, taking the following extract from the letter of Mr. BLANCHARD, their nominee for Governor:

"Are the people of Maine ready to concede the claim set up by the National Administration to that despotic power which would deprive them of their dearest rights and most sacred privileges—of all those noble guarantees affecting life, liberty and property, which are secured to them by the grand old Constitution established by their fathers?"

This, as I remarked, "is New-England Federalism, rank and raw. This precise language is stereotyped in the archives of Federalism. They preached it until the patriotic masses loathed Federalism and spewed it out."

I stated then, what I reiterate now, that the sentiments and policy of the Federalists in 1814, borrowed from the Tories of 1776, "would run the Democratic party under; for no party, be its antecedents what they may, can, during the war, be unfaithful to the country, with impunity. The people unerringly find and take the patriotic side. No matter if the Administration errs, falls short of its duty, or even exceeds its authority, the people, in and through all such trials, stand by their Government."

The Democratic candidate for Governor of Maine inquired whether the people of that State would uphold the "National Administration" in the exercise of "despotic power;" whether they would surrender their "dearest rights and most sacred privileges;" and finally whether they would yield "the noble guarantees affecting life, liberty and property."

Mr. BLANCHARD awaited his answer through the ballot-boxes. He has it! It is the answer that patriotism returned to similar inquiries submitted to the electors of Connecticut, Kentucky, Vermont and California. It is the answer Ohio will return to the disloyal teachings of VALLANDIGHAM—the answer that all loyal States will return to "Copperhead" interrogatories.

This is the first time I have availed myself of the offensive epithet "Copperhead." I do not apply it indiscriminately to Democrats. God forbid that I should be tempted to do so great a wrong. The army and the navy number, among their gallant and devoted legions, tens of thousands of Democrats. The soil of rebellion is fertilized by Democratic blood. During the first two years of the war, the voice of party was merged in a generous emulation for country. And even now there are Democratic soldiers, statesmen and Generals doing their whole duty.

But, unfortunately, this is not true of the Democratic party, for, as a party, they are either controlled, or beguiled, or paralyzed by disloyal influences. If, in their speeches and resolutions, the rebellion is spoken of, it is with "bated breath." They treat it tenderly. "With treason and traitors they woo gently as any cooing dove." But upon the Administration they visit all their indignation, exhaust all their bitterness, and waste all their thunder.

It is in no partisan spirit I say all this, for until this wicked rebellion is over, I care nothing for party. Indeed, my wish and hope has been, and is, that the Democratic party, imbued with patriotism and wisdom, would rise in its strength, unite with the political friends of the Administration, and crush REBELLION.

That such a course would bring the Democratic party into power, I foresee and concede—concede readily and cheerfully; for those who preserve the Government and restore the Union are entitled to the confidence and gratitude of the people.

But factious opposition, party fault-finding, and above all "Copperhead" exhibitions, will neither end the war, restore the Union, or enable the Democratic party to elect a President.

It would be absurd to claim perfection for the Administration. Infallibility belongs not to the fallible. I can see errors and infirmities—weaknesses and blunders, in the Administration. But for these things am I, or is any one, justified in giving "aid and comfort to the enemy?" Will the Democratic party obstinately close its eyes to the fact that, in a time of war, opposition to the Administration is resistance to the Government?

As to the draft, it was, at the least, but of doubtful expediency; and it has been made various, confused, complicated and embarrassed as to render it largely ineffectual. We shall not obtain as many conscripts as are required to bring the war to an honorable conclusion. We ought not to have been in this dilemma. At an early day I suggested and urged upon members of Congress and members of the Cabinet a remedy for the evil we now suffer from. It was simply to enlist men for "two years, or for during the war." Under that form of enlistment we should have rejected in an army of veterans. But, as an outsider, my voice was too feeble. I remembered that this was the most popular form of enlistment in 1812. It was the form, after serving three short campaigns as a volunteer, under which I enlisted myself, in 1814, though that term of service expired by the treaty of peace before I left the recruiting rendezvous.

But while the draft will not give to the army the number of troops required, there is another way of doing it. And this imposes a duty upon us all. We need now a rekindling of the flame of patriotism which illuminated the States and inspired the people in 1861 and 1862. Let us appeal to the spirit that then animated all classes. More and better soldiers can be obtained by voluntary efforts than by conscription. Experience had taught others that the Washington Government seems not to have understood, that for obtaining soldiers, July and August are unseasonable months; that while recruits, during the heated term, are obtained with difficulty, in September, October, and November they come with a rush. If this and other States can be organized and stimulated, as this State was in 1862, by Gov. MORGAN, an invincible army, including one-half or two-third of the returned veterans, (one of whom is worth two green volunteers, or three conscripts,) can be raised in two months.

Nor should it be forgotten, either by the recruits or by those who are called upon to furnish bounties, that their army work is nearly done—that the fighting is principally over. We need a large army now more for moral effect than for battles. In the future, more will depend upon statesmen and civilians than upon Generals and soldiers.

But now a word in conclusion. The President has, by proclamation, suspended the writ of habeas corpus. This, though a necessity in some portions of the country, and elsewhere perfectly harmless, will be made the occasion for renewed and vehement exhibitions of political hostility. The Atlas, of yesterday, announced it as a "Suspension of the Writ of Liberty."

This Proclamation, even while no more than one Judge McCUNE exists, is as needful as it was in New-Orleans, where there were a Judge HALE and a Gen. JACKSON. None but enemies have anything to fear from it. But if it were otherwise—if, in isolated cases, this power should be abused, it is better that an individual should be wronged than that the Government and Union should be endangered.

This Proclamation will strengthen the Government and weaken its enemies; and those who, for political effect, choose to redouble the folly of the Federalists, will find themselves, after the rebellion has been put down, where the Federalists were after the war of 1812, compelled to disband—the fanatics either seeking protection from popular indignation within healthier political organizations, or, in retirement and obscurity, invoking the forgetfulness of their countrymen. T. W.

Gold-Mining in Canada.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

QUEBEC, Wednesday, Sept. 16, 1863.

Year by year an attempt is made to bring into notice the gold field on the Chaudiere River near Quebec, and year by year, as the nuggets found increase in size, the attempt more nearly attains success. At length a sort of gold fever has been induced, and from 500 to 600 men are now at work on the diggings, with the varying success which appears attended gold-mining all the world over. Some men go up and find nothing; others make their $50 per diem,—a good deal of the difference depending on the character of the claims taken up; more, perhaps, on the industry and perseverance of the miners. A fine lot of nuggets, weighing about nine pounds, were brought down from the diggings last week by one person, the largest weighing just ten ounces, and being valued at $200. Specimens of quartz, with fine grains of gold in it, are also shown; but no machinery for crushing has as yet been sent up to the spots where the quartz occurs.

The drift gold of the Chaudiere differs in appearance from that of Australia or California. There is none of what is often called "dust gold" here, but it is replaced by small pieces resembling shot of various sizes pressed and crushed out of shape. The larger pieces have the same hammered appearance, which, it strikes one, could possibly result from the action of ice. The gold is yellow rather than red, and very fine. I suppose $50,000 worth have been got out this season. Within the past fortnight a company have built sluices and "dole" on the Gilbert River, a tributary of the Chaudiere, and we may therefore soon look for better results than have hitherto been obtained without appliances of this kind. Their success will probably determine whether there is or is not to be another gold excitement on a grand scale. My belief is that there is plenty of the precious metal, and in great nuggets, too, and that, ere long, Lower Canada will take a high rank as a gold-producing country. I say Lower Canada, but there is little doubt that the auriferous formations extend into portions of the Eastern States, though whether it is everywhere as rich as it is here I could not venture to say.

Arrivals in the City.

Gen. Dan. E. Sickles and Staff arrived at the Brevoort House on Saturday at 10 o'clock A. M., from Lake George, where he has been spending a few days succeeding his departure from Saratoga. He retired to the quietness of his country seat for the purpose of spending the Sabbath. He will be in the City again to-day. His health is reported to be exceedingly good, and, although he is still obliged to use the crutches, rumor says he will visit Washington the latter part of this week with the intention of again assuming active command shortly after his arrival.

E. de La Ste. French Legation; Wm. H. Russell, Lexington, Mo.; Com. Chas. G. Boutelle, Coast Survey; Gen. S. Lawrence and Chas. Jeffery, England; Sergeant and J. Head, Boston; are at the Fifth Avenue House.

Gen. Blanchard and wife, U. S. Vols.; Capt. J. G. Walker, U. S. Navy; Capt. J. W. McIntosh and Surgeon R. R. Smith, U. S. Army; Capt. R. F. Clark, Morris Island, and Capt. J. F. Grimes, U. S. Army, are at the Astor House.

The Remains of the Late Col. M. K. Bryan.

The remains of Col. M. K. BRYAN were laid in state on Saturday at the City Hall, where they have been visited by a large number of citizens. They will so remain until 2 P. M. to-day. On their arrival from New-Orleans they were placed in charge of Mr. WM. CARNOCK, undertaker. It was found impossible to expose the body to view. He has handsomely inclosed the remains—the coffin covered with black cloth, with silver fastenings, and is elegantly and chastely ornamented. A large silver plate bears the following inscription:

Col. M. K. BRYAN,
One Hundred and Seventy-6th N. Y. Volunteers,
Killed in Action before Port Hudson, La.,
June 14, 1863,
In his 40th year.

The coffin is draped with the American flag, over the plate is a wreath of immortelles, and at the foot is the sword and military hat of the deceased.

Yesterday a detail guard from the One Hundred and Seventy-6th regiment, under command of Capt. John McGUNN, were on duty at the Governor's Room, and were relieved in the evening by a guard from the Sixty-ninth regiment, N. Y. S. N. G.

The remains will be taken from the Governor's Room to-day at 3 P. M., under escort of the Sixty-ninth regiment, and conveyed to the Albany boat at the foot of Cortlandt-street, where they will be delivered to the Committee of that city. At Albany the funeral will take place on Wednesday, the remains lying in state at the Capitol until that day, when the State and civil authorities will unite with the military in the funeral ceremonies.

The Committee on National Affairs, Aldermen FARRY, Chairman, have handsomely perfected all the arrangements for the honors to be paid in this City to the deceased.

The following orders, for to-day, have been issued by Gen. SANFORD and Col. BAGLEY:

Moral Aspects of Our City.

At the Tabernacle, No. 446 Broadway, quite a large audience assembled last evening to hear the second discourse of Rev. C. C. GOSS upon the above subject. The choir, consisted of some twenty young Misses, opened with singing "All hail! the power of Jesus' name." After the usual opening exercises, and the taking of a collection in behalf of the Poor Fund of the Christian Alliance, the speaker said that his object this evening was to show the numbers and relative influence of the various nationalities in our midst, and urge the diffusion of the Gospel as the only means to harmonize and bless them.

Although this island was first settled by the Dutch, yet very soon these were mixed with other ingredients. The Patroons induced emigration without respect to nationality. In 1624 some Walloons settled here; in 1643 an English colony from New-England; in 1655 some Swedes from the Delaware; in 1699 quite a number of German exiles from England. Africans, too, about this time numbered 600. Thus, in the year 1700 our City was composed of a heterogeneous class, numbering some 5,000.

The next seventy-five years there was scarcely any importations. In 1725 we numbered 7,000; in 1750, 9,000, and in 1770, 22,000. Thus, at the beginning of the revolution, we were more homogeneous than before or since. The speaker argued that there was a providence in this. At the close of this century we had increased to 60,489, but the increase was mostly from the neighboring colonies, so that our homogeneity was undisturbed. In 1820, although we numbered 123,706, only 5,868 were aliens.

From this time, however, the floodgates of immigration were opened and all nations poured in upon us. In 1855 the total number of our population was 629,810. Of these 256,099 were of foreign birth, and 373,721—an excess of the former of over 120,000. The speaker here presented tables showing the exact number of the various nativities now in our City, and the proportion of each in the various Wards. In round numbers we have 1,000,000 of inhabitants. 500,000 are foreigners. One half of these, or 250,000, are Irish, 125,000 Germans, 25,000 English and the remaining 100,000 mixed. Many of the native born are far from being American. A birth here does not make them in essence and feeling Anglo-American.

All these diverse elements cannot be blended, politically, mentally, nor, for a long time, religiously. It can only be done morally. The Gospel scheme is the only one on record intended to blend all nations in one. This should be propagated in the English language. The great mistake of missionaries, at home and abroad, is the reverse of this. The speaker read the second chapter of Acts to show that what the Gospel did for all nations in Jerusalem it can do in New-York. The next discourse of the series is, "The neglected children of our City, and what should be done for them."

Diocese of New-York.

"The Parochial Fund of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the Diocese of New-York," to whose advertisement in another column we direct attention, is an object that will commend itself to all classes of churchmen, and indeed to many who are not churchmen. The purchase of glebes, and the building of parsonages for the hard-working country clergy, is an object so catholic, that few of the wealthy and generous will decline to aid it.

The special act of the Legislature, by which the Trustees are created—an act carefully revised by the Immortal Lorenzo BEACHER, in conjunction with Judge MURRAY HOFFMAN, supplies a want long and painfully felt in the Episcopal Church of a fund to which its members might contribute during their lives, or by their wills, with a well-grounded confidence as to the faithful appropriation of their gifts.

The gentlemen selected by the Diocesan Convention to control the fund, including the names of Gen. DIX, Messrs. HOFFMAN, DE PEYSTER, AUTON, &c., afford no slight guarantee for skill and fidelity in its management.

And will positively prevent YELLOW FEVER, BILIOUS FEVER, &c.

THEY CONTAIN NO ALCOHOL OR BAD WHISKY!

They will cure the above diseases in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred.

Induced by the extensive sale and universal popularity of Hoofland's German Bitters, (purely vegetable,) hosts of ignorant Quacks and unscrupulous adventurers, have opened upon suffering humanity the flood-gates of Nostrums in the shape of poor whisky, vilely compounded with injurious drugs, and christened Tonics, Stomachics and Bitters.

Beware of the innumerable array of Alcoholic preparations in pictorial bottles and big-bellied kegs, under the modest appellation of Bitters, which instead of curing, only aggravate disease, and leave the disappointed sufferer in despair.

Do you want something to strengthen you?
Do you want a good appetite?
Do you want to build up your constitution?
Do you want to feel well?
Do you want to get rid of nervousness?
Do you want energy?
Do you want to sleep well?
Do you want a brisk and vigorous feeling?

If you do, use HOOFLAND'S GERMAN BITTERS.

From Rev. J. Newton Brown, D. D., Editor of the Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge.

Although not disposed to favor or recommend Patent Medicines in general, through distrust of their ingredients and their effects, I yet feel sufficient confidence in what I may not testify to the benefits he believes himself to have received from any simple preparation, in the hope that he may thus contribute to the benefit of others.

I do this more readily in regard to Hoofland's German Bitters, prepared by Dr. C. M. Jackson, of this City, because I have repeatedly taken them for many years, under the impression that they were chiefly an alcoholic mixture. I am indebted to my friend Robert Shoemaker, Esq., for the removal of this prejudice by proper tests, and for encouragement to try them, when suffering from great and total prostration of debility. The use of three bottles of these Bitters, at the beginning of the present year, was followed by evident relief, and restoration to a degree of bodily and mental vigor which I had not felt for six months before, and had almost despaired of regaining. I therefore thank God and my friend for directing me to the use of them. Yours, truly, J. NEWTON BROWN.

PHILADELPHIA, June 25, 1861.

PARTICULAR NOTICE.

There are many preparations sold under the name of Bitters, put up in quart bottles, compounded of the cheapest whisky or common rum, costing from 20 to 40 cents per gallon, the taste disguised by Anise or Coriander Seed.

This class of Bitters has caused, and will continue to cause, as long as they can be sold, hundreds to die the death of the drunkard. By their use, the system is kept continually under the influence of alcoholic stimulants of the worst kind, the desire for Liquor is created and kept up, and the result is all the horrors attendant upon a drunkard's life and death.

For those who desire and will have a Liquor Bitters we publish the following receipt. Get one bottle Hoofland's German Bitters and mix with three quarts of good brandy or whisky, and the result will be a preparation that will far excel in medicinal virtues and true excellence any of the numerous Liquor Bitters in the market and will cost much less. You will have all the virtues of HOOFLAND'S BITTERS in connection with a good article of Liquor, at a much less price than those inferior preparations will cost you.

ATTENTION, SOLDIERS!

AND FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS.

We call the attention of all having relations or friends in the army to the fact that "Hoofland's German Bitters" will cure nine-tenths of the diseases induced by exposures and privations incident to camp life. In the lists published almost daily in the newspapers, on the arrival of the sick, it will be noticed that a very large proportion are suffering from debility

THE GREAT BATTLE IN GEORGIA.

THE ACTION OF SATURDAY.

THE ACTION OF SUNDAY.

Desperate Fighting on Both Sides.

The Losses Estimated at Thirty Thousand.

The Battle Undecided on Sunday Night.

GUNS LOST AND GUNS CAPTURED.

Rosecrans Reported to be Driving the Rebel Advance.

THE BATTLE ON SATURDAY.

CINCINNATI, Monday, Sept. 21.

The Commercial of this city gives the following account of the great battle near Chattanooga on Saturday:

"The battle opened at 11 o'clock in the vicinity of Widow Glenn, on the road leading from McLemore's Cave to Chattanooga.

The fighting soon became general, the rebels maneuvering their troops finely.

Early in the action the rebels made an impetuous charge on the famous Lozenge battery, and captured five out of the six guns belonging to it. Capt. Van Pelt, commanding the battery, was taken prisoner.

At 2 o'clock the contest was perfectly terrific, the roll of musketry being far more continuous and deafening than at Stones River.

At 3:45 P. M., our division centre was pushed, broken, and retreated in disorder.

Col. HAZZARD planted a battery and soon checked the pursuing enemy, who, in turn, were driven over the same ground.

The division of Gen. DAVIS was then driven back by the rebels with heavy loss, and every gun of the Eighth Indiana regiment was captured, when Gen. DAVIS rallied his forces and pushed the enemy back and retook the guns.

REYNOLDS lost heavily, but stubbornly held his position, driving the enemy, but never leaving his line.

PALMER, who was overwhelmed, failed to get off his whole battery, and two guns were lost.

VAN CLEVE, although fighting gallantly, lost ground, and being overpowered, failed to regain his position.

Our line was pressed severely and wavered.

The rebels exulting over their apparent success, made the air resound with cheers. They advanced along the whole line, and when within fire the musketry rolled from right to left, and till 5 o'clock the fighting was terrific.

Gen. ROSECRANS grew anxious; the wounded came pouring in, and the rebels kept steadily moving up to his headquarters.

New forces were opposed to the rebels, and from this time till dark the battle raged with destructive fury.

At dark, when the firing had almost ceased, the rebels threw forward fresh troops and engaged our right.

The action again became general until long after dark, and raged with the greatest fury.

The battle thus far has been a bloody one and our loss is very heavy.

Rebel prisoners say that some of their regiments are almost annihilated.

Both armies occupy the same ground as when the action began.

We have captured several hundred prisoners, many of whom are from the East.

We took ten guns and lost seven.

FURTHER REPORTS FROM NASHVILLE.

Dispatch to the Washington Chronicle.

NASHVILLE, Sunday, Tenn., Sept. 20.

There has been great excitement here all day, as it became known early this morning that BRAGG and ROSECRANS had met in battle. From officers who have arrived I learn that BRAGG, reinforced by at least one division from LEE's army, attacked ROSECRANS yesterday morning, causing considerable confusion in THOMAS' corps. The fight took place in Walker County, which is full of creeks and mountains. As near as I can learn, it was drive on one side, and then the other, neither gaining much advantage. The divisions of Generals VAN CLEVE and REYNOLDS suffered to some extent, and after losing much ground, recovered it. There was considerable hand-to-hand fighting, and several pieces of artillery were captured, recaptured, and lost again. As at the battle of Stone River, Generals PALMER and NEGLEY maneuvered their respective divisions splendidly, and assisted VAN CLEVE in recovering lost ground. The artillery was not called into requisition in all the divisions. The Tenth Indiana suffered most, and lost all its field officers. The Thirty-first Illinois, Fortieth Kentucky and Second Ohio also assisted in the brunt of the action. It is believed at Gen. GRANGER's headquarters (Nashville) that the struggle ended yesterday (Saturday 19th) with no Federal disadvantages, though the most absurd rumors have prevailed the entire day. The Secessionists here had Gens. NEGLEY, STANLEY and PALMER killed, but news of an official character states that neither are injured. The presumption is that, (considering BURNSIDE has not established a communication with ROSECRANS,) Gen. JOHNSTON, who was in command, calculated to crawl in between the two armies, crush ROSECRANS's force, which was comparatively small, and then pounce upon ROSECRANS, thus whipping us by detail. In this, no doubt, he has failed, as the rebel forces stumbled against THOMAS' corps of ROSECRANS' army. There would, probably, have been no vacillating upon our side, had it not been that the executive commands were using marching orders and moving incessantly. Our latest dispatches received at Gen. GRANGER's are of a nature which must call for congratulations in to the result.

THE BATTLE ON SUNDAY.

LOUISVILLE, Monday, Sept. 21—11:45 A. M.

Our army under Gen. ROSECRANS has been badly broken, and compelled to retreat to Chattanooga, by Bragg, with heavy reinforcements from Lee, BEAUREGARD and Joe JOHNSTON.

WASHINGTON, Monday, Sept. 21.

The National Republican says:

"The enemy attacked ROSECRANS again on Sunday morning at 9 o'clock with overwhelming numbers. The battle raged fiercely all day.

According to the latest accounts received here up to 2 o'clock this afternoon, which left Chattanooga at 8 o'clock last evening, two, and only two, of Gen. ROSECRANS' divisions gave way in utter panic and confusion. Ten regiments of 10,000 of these had been rallied and got back to their places; while the remainder of the army had not given ground, and of the latest account were driving the advance of the rebel army back.

This we know is the latest news here.

The number of killed and wounded on both sides will probably not fall short of thirty thousand.

THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

An Attack by Guerrillas—Capture of $2,000,000 in Confederate Funds—Sharpshooters from the Enemy.

WASHINGTON, Monday, Sept. 21.

Rear-Admiral PORTER, writing to the Navy Department from Cairo, under date of Sept. 15, says:

"The river below seems quiet. There has been no attempt made to obstruct commerce or navigation. A body of guerrillas attacked the gunboat Champion from behind the levee while she was convoying a body of troops below. The troops passed on safely and the Champion stopped and fought the rebels until she made them retire, losing some of their men—report says fifty-seven. They have not been heard of since, except that they were falling back on Alexandria, Gen. HUSTON having given them chase with his division.

As I came up I overtook a part of the Marine brigade, under Col. CURRY. He reported to me that he had just captured at Bollver three rebel paymasters, with $2,000,000 in Confederate money, to pay off the soldiers at Little Rock. He also captured the escort, consisting of thirty-five men. This will not improve the dissatisfaction now existing in Gen. PRICE's army, and the next news we hear will be that Gen. BRANN has possession of Little Rock.

The sunbeats pick up deserters every day, who say the rebels don't intend to fight in Arkansas, and that with proper steps she will be in the Union again in forty days. Lieut. RACUS captured a Col. MARTOOZ, who was on a conscription expedition, and it gave unusual satisfaction to all the people."

FROM MISSOURI AND KANSAS.

Soldiers Shot by Guerrillas—A Steamboat Burned—Refugees—Gen. Hunter—Quantrell's Movements.

ST. LOUIS, Monday, Sept. 21.

The steamer Marcella was boarded and plundered, on the 15th inst., at Dover Landing, Lafayette County. The soldiers of the Fifth State militia, returning home on furlough, were taken two miles into the woods and shot. The boat was burned.

During the past week 1,000 persons have crossed the river at Lexington, mostly refugees from the border counties. Cass County, under Gen. EWING's order, is nearly depopulated.

Gen. HOWARD has arrived, to preside over the court-martial to investigate the burning of the steamer Rude.

A Leavenworth dispatch to the Democrat says a messenger, who came to Fort Scott on Wednesday night, reports COFFEE at Cowskin Prairie with 1,500 men, and that QUANTRELL had passed Bell's Mills with most of his command on his way south, probably to join COFFEE. A company of the Second Kansas (colored) and the Third Wisconsin cavalry regiment are a few miles from COFFEE's rendezvous.

BURNS was on his way up with a small escort.

THE WAR IN LOUISIANA.

A Successful Expedition to Alexandria.

CAIRO, Sunday, Sept. 20.

An expedition under Gen. C. BUCKER, from Natchez to Alexandria, captured several cannon, and destroyed a fortification at Alexandria. A large quantity of mules, stores and cattle were also captured.

THE LATE FIGHT NEAR KNOXVILLE.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Wednesday, Sept. 16.

On Wednesday, Lieut.-Col. CAYES, with 500 men of the One Hundredth Ohio regiment was attacked near Tifford, 22 miles up the railroad, by 1,200 rebels, under Gen. JACKSON.

After fighting gallantly for two hours, our forces losing heavily in killed and wounded, were compelled to surrender to overpowering numbers.

[The rebel journals have already reported this affair as having occurred near Jonesboro.—ED. TIMES.]

INTERESTING FROM JAPAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, Monday, Sept. 21.

Arrived, ship Herald of the Morning, from Boston.

A private letter from the American Minister, Mr. PORTER, dated at Kanagawa, Japan, Aug. 15th, says, that the prompt resentment of the outrage upon our flag has resulted most favorably. The Wyoming, with six guns, destroyed a Japanese steamer, bark and brig, mounting twenty-two guns, besides enraging six batteries. The accomplishment of so much with so little means, astonished the Government and people of Japan, and, what is strange, the Government is obliged to us.

Other advices, of the same date, say the British fleet had gone to SATSUMA's dominions to demand £25,000 indemnity and the surrender of the murderers of Mr. RICHARDSON. If the money is not paid a considerable campaign would be inaugurated against the Daimios.

Dates from Shanghai to the 31st July, state that the cholera was unabated and the mortality fearful.

Break in the Erie Canal.

ALBANY, Monday, Sept. 21.

The heavy rain of last Friday caused a break in the Erie Canal, at Hoffman's Ferry. The break extends 100 feet, and the earth was washed to the depth of 10 feet below the bottom of the canal. Boats will not be able to pass before Wednesday morning.

Difficulty Between Citizens and Soldiers in Cincinnati.

CINCINNATI, Monday, Sept. 21.

Last night a difficulty occurred, on the corner of Bigrel and Spring streets, between some citizens and soldiers, in which three of the former were wounded.

Arrival of Cotton at Halifax.

HALIFAX, N. S., Monday, Sept. 21.

The steamer Edwin Hamilton, from Matamoras, with a full load of cotton for Liverpool, arrived here to-day.

NEWS FROM WASHINGTON.

OUR SPECIAL WASHINGTON DISPATCHES.

WASHINGTON, Monday, Sept. 21.

ADVANCE OF CAVALRY.

A movement of the Army of the Potomac has commenced, so far as to send forward Pleasonton's cavalry across the Rapidan. The crossing was effected without opposition. It is prophesied that but a feeble force of rebels intervenes between Meade and Richmond. Commanders who have doubted the correctness of estimates of many detachments sent from Lee's army recently, now seem inclined to attach the fact, since the news of the Chattanooga battle has begun to arrive, Rosecrans is fighting the whole Southern Confederacy.

DISAPPEARANCE OF REBEL FORCES.

A gentleman who left Falmouth a few days ago, reports that there was no rebel force in or near Fredericksburgh, and but few pickets were to be seen. The same party says there is only one brigade as low down as Gordonsville, on the Rapidan.

A RAILROAD PARTY.

There is only one squad of rebel cavalry this side of the Rappahannock and east of the Orange and Alexandria Railroad. These men are on a marauding excursion to pick up stragglers, whom they strip of everything valuable, and then let go. Two men, with Drs. BURNS and RICHARDS, of the Michigan cavalry brigade, were captured Sunday, between Hartwood Church and Catlett's Station, and this morning they came into camp stripped of everything.

DRAFT MATTERS.

It having been ascertained that able-bodied men, after passing as substitutes, have sent to the general rendezvous others disqualified for military service, but answering to the same name, the Provost-Marshal-General directs that Provost-Marshals be held responsible for delivering the identical men who have passed examination. Members of the Board of Enrollment are also notified that any neglect or violation of paragraphs 84, 87, 94 and 95 of the regulations for Provost-Marshals will result in the dismissal of the offender.

SWINDLING OF THE REBEL COMMISSIONER OF EXCHANGE.

The Bureau of Exchange here received a letter a day or two since from Commissioner OTEY, at Richmond, notifying them that twelve thousand prisoners paroled by Gen. GRANT, had been returned to the field, and in exchange, referred to the same number of our prisoners delivered at City Point. The whole statement in regard to delivery was a lie; not a man of ours had been returned for those twelve thousand, who were then armed, and have doubtless participated in the late battle at Chattanooga.

ATTEMPTED ASSASSINATION.

Capt. BARNES, Fifth New-York cavalry, was seriously wounded near Kelly's Ford on Thursday last. There is some reason to believe that the shot was fired by a deserting conscript, to avoid being captured.

A RAILROAD PROSPECTUS.

The Orange and Alexandria Railroad is now thoroughly guarded as far as Culpeper Court-house, mostly by detachments from the Eleventh corps.

INTERNAL REVENUE RECEIPTS.

Receipts of internal revenue to-day have been $425,316, the largest amount ever received in one day. The receipts from this source are steadily increasing.

THE MEXICAN ARMBASSADOR.

Gen. COBAS had an interview to-day with the Secretary of State with reference to his mission from the Juarez authorities.

LEFT FOR NEW-YORK.

Assistant Secretary of State FREDERICK SEWARD left for New-York this morning, to be absent three or four days.

DESPATCHES TO THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.

A CHARGE AFTER THE GUERRILLA WHITE.

Reliable information has reached Washington that at noon on Friday last Col. LOWELL, in command of the Second Massachusetts regiment and detachments of the Thirteenth and Sixteenth New-York cavalry, started out in pursuit of the guerrilla WHITE. Col. LOWELL found that WHITE had crossed Goose Creek at Cockrell's Ford and crossed the country in nearly a straight line towards Mount Gilead and Hughesville, passing near Bell's Mills at 11 o'clock on that day. The trail of WHITE's men was discerned easily in the morning of the 16th, and was followed to a point near Mount Gilead. Satisfactory evidence then appearing that WHITE was back on the Snickersville road, Col. LOWELL returned to Dover and Aldie to camp. As the result of the expedition three of WHITE's men were captured and one killed. Four stolen horses on horseback were also arrested under suspicious circumstances. In some of the places visited by Col. LOWELL, he was informed that WHITE had notified the rebels that they had been consolidated; but no such thing appears had been taken to force them into the rebel service. It was currently reported at Aldie that both WHITE and MOSBY had received orders to leave Loudon County, and move nearer to the main body of LEE's army. All the guerrillas that have been recently at home have gone West within a day or two.

BLOCKADE RUNNERS CAPTURED.

The Navy Department has received information of the capture of the schooner Flying Hood, by the steamer Princess Royal, on the 12th ult. She was from Brazos, Texas, loaded with cotton.

The U. S. bark Gem of the Sea, on the 31st ult., off Charleston Harbor, Fla., captured the sloop Richard, five tons burden, loaded with 5½ bales of cotton.

SILVER BAR CONTRIBUTION FROM NEVADA.

Private advices from Virginia City, Nevada Territory, say additional subscriptions to the amount of $9,000 have been made there for the Sanitary Commission. The money is to be forwarded in silver bricks of about $1,000 each. A good evidence of the mineral resources of that Territory, as well as of the liberality of its inhabitants.

EXECUTION OF DESERTERS.

A letter from the Army of the Potomac to-night states that many of the substitutes who had deserted were shot in the several corps towards the close of last week, and prompt and extreme punishment now awaits this class of offenders, without hope of pardon.

THE NIAGARA READY FOR SEA.

The magnificent steamship Niagara, of 5,000 tons, and with her enormous battery, is now ready for sea at Boston, where she has remained so as to be conveniently near to those patriotic fishermen who have so long manifested an earnest desire to enlist in the navy. The early desertion of the steamship is credited in apprehension of the advent of Rear Lazzo's rebel rams, with the connivance of the British Government. The enlistment of the fishermen has been retarded owing to an unusually successful fishing season and the advance of the price of fish. Success in their labors makes them very independent. In view of rich prizes it is supposed that the business of recruiting for the navy will be additionally stimulated.

THE EXEMPTIONS UNDER THE ENROLLMENT ACT.

It may not be generally known that the causes which exempt from service under the Enrollment act are not as numerous as those governing the military service in Europe. The examinations under that act are conducted with about the same particularity as in our regular army. The list of causes was prepared by a Board of Surgeons, and sanctioned by the military authorities, apart from any agency of the Provost-Marshal-General.

EXPLOITS OF A SCOUTING PARTY.

A scouting party has been patrolling the country between the Occoquan, Dumfries and Brentsville for the last five days, during which they have scattered the rebel guerrillas, captured one of them and a number of their horses, and brought in nine deserters.

THE BATTLE OF ANTIETAM.

Its Anniversary in the Army of the Potomac.

Flag-Presentation, Speeches, Toasts, &c.

ARMY OF THE POTOMAC, Saturday, Sept. 19, 1863.

Through storms raged, and battle thundered and commotion was everywhere in the ranks of the Army of the Potomac, yet the anniversary of the great battle of Antietam did not pass entirely unheeded. A portion of this army, a portion, too, whose ranks are thinner because of that conflict, duly celebrated the day.

The patriotic citizens of Wisconsin, Indiana and Michigan, resident in Washington, some time since caused to be prepared, through Messrs. TIFFANY & Co., of your City, a magnificent color, as a gift to the famous Iron Brigade, composed of regiments from the States named, and now attached to the First army corps. The anniversary of the battle of Antietam, Sept. 17, was chosen by the brigade as the occasion for the presentation, and the days previous the camp of the troops was all alive with preparations for the event. A magnificent bower was erected and other fit and extensive preparations made—but with that minor misfortune which never deserts a brave soldier, the army moved, and disappointment reigned, for Quartermasters don't transport cedar bowers, and the occasion was likely to be lost.

But the Iron brigade never was hard up for resources. Summoning some of the pluck of a dozen battles, they resolved that there should be no postponements with them, be it a fight or a collation. And Thursday afternoon, despite lowering clouds and showers of rain and impeding movements, found an impromptu preparation, amidst a dense forest, which would have done honor to any other sylvan cot.

The invited guests from Washington, owing to the movement, were not present in person, but thoroughly in spirit, while all the leading officers of the First corps were in attendance.

At 4 o'clock the regiments of the brigade were drawn up, forming three sides of a hollow square, and the flag being brought forth, Mr. W. T. SANBORN, of Milwaukee, advanced and said:

Soldiers of our Iron Brigade!—This day was appointed by your commanding officers for the presentation of this beautiful flag. Quite a number of the distinguished citizens of Wisconsin, Indiana and Michigan intended to be present on this occasion, and witness the ceremonies of the presentation and reception of this flag. It was intended that Hon. H. W. RAMSAY, of Wisconsin, First Assistant Postmaster-General, should be present on this occasion, and present this flag to you. The movements of the army have interfered with the intended programme, and prevented his attendance, together with that of others of your many friends who with great pleasure would have been present at this time. I, delivered upon me to present to you this beautiful flag, on whose folds is inscribed our country's motto, "E Pluribus Unum." Those States in the far West, your homes, look upon you and your achievements with pride and admiration. Though far distant, they have not forgotten you, but watch with anxious solicitude your movements. They know you and your bravery and valor, as also does the whole country. More than two years since the majority of the regiments comprising this brigade marched through the City of Washington to join and form the grand Army of the Potomac. I witnessed your arrival. You then numbered in each regiment a thousand or more. You marched with light steps and buoyant hearts. Since that time your ranks have been decimated, not so much by disease, but by hard fighting on many a hard contested battle-field, on all of which—I say it with the greatest pride—you have conducted yourselves with the greatest bravery and gallantry, and have never left the field of battle but to gain cause for your friends, the dears ones from whom you came, or your country, to be ashamed of you. Your courage and valor have been shown on the battle fields of Gainesville, Bull Run, South Mountain, Antietam, Fredericksburg, Fitzhugh's Crossing, Chancellorsville, and last, but not least, the glorious battle of Gettysburgh, where your noble Corps Commander fell, the brave and gallant Gen. REYNOLDS. By desperate fighting in the many battles in which you have participated, your brigade numbers less than a thousand men. I hope that what remains of you may be spared to return to your homes and friends in these glorious States in the West. This gigantic rebellion has been prosecuted with a vigor and an energy worthy of a better cause; but the hearts the sun of their presence is set, their energy is fitful, and sinking was before the triumphant march of the army of freedom and the Union. Press on to the glorious work, the end, I believe, is near at hand. There is a black speck which hovers on the horizon, far away across the ocean's waters, threatening to interfere with us in our efforts to restore peace and preserve our great and glorious country. We say let them come! They will learn that a nation of freemen can and will preserve their country and its glorious institutions, whether assailed by foreign monarchies or by the rebellious offspring of our country, emblazoned on the folds of yonder flag—the eagle—shall be borne aloft on your banners by the hosts of freedom, when the Lilies of France shall have withered and the Lion of England shall lay rotting in the noonday sun. Soldiers of the Iron Brigade! I will not ask you if you will rally around this proud emblem, preserve this flag; it would be a foolish question. I know you will, I know that you will; and, if needs be, sacrifice your lives for the preservation and maintenance, Remember, emblazoned on its folds, "E Pluribus Unum," those words of many.

Though the old Alleghany may tower to heaven,
And the tides of valleys divide,
The links of our destiny cannot be riven,
While the train of these words shall abide.
Then, oh! let them ever be cherished and treasured,
Though our blood like our rivers shall run!
Divide as we may in our own native land,
To the rest of the world we are one.

In behalf of the citizens of Wisconsin, Indiana and Michigan, resident in Washington, I present to you this flag. Take, protect and preserve it; may your future be like the past, brilliant and glorious, and may you be spared by God in his providence to once again witness a united and happy country, enjoying peace, happiness and prosperity.

Col. W. W. ROBINSON, of the Seventh Wisconsin Volunteers, commanding the brigade, received the flag, and replied as follows:

SIR: In behalf of the officers and men of the brigade, I return you and the gentlemen associated with you in this donation sincere thanks for your beautiful gift. If our conduct as soldiers during the two years and over that we have been in the field merits the commendation of our countrymen, your present is appropriate. Since the organization of the brigade, over two years ago, the four original regiments, Second, Sixth and Seventh Wisconsin, and Nineteenth Indiana have served together; they have shared the labors, privations and hardships of the camp together, with two or three exceptions only, they have endured the fatigues of the march, breasted the storms, and waded the mud of the severe campaigns of the army of the Potomac, and together they have met the foe. During the past thirteen months these regiments have stood shoulder to shoulder more than twenty days under the enemy's fire; in one stream has mingled the blood of their comrades slain—poured out a willing sacrifice to the cause of our struggling country. Soon after the battle of Antietam, the Twenty-fourth Michigan was assigned to the brigade. At that time it was a young regiment, though large of its age—neat and soldierly in its appearance. We thought, from the circumstances of its broad front and bright uniform, that it was intended to put us to shame, and were somewhat anxious to have the time come when we could take it into a fight, and see the rebels take the conceit out of it. At the first battle of Fredericksburgh, in December last, the Twenty-fourth was with us the first time in a fight. After that battle they were taken into fellowship, and since that time we have felt proud of the connection. At Gettysburgh, (with the disposition common to the younger boys of a family to imitate the feats of the elder brothers,) it undertook to whip a division of the rebels, who were turning our left flank; although it received severe punishment it came "roosting" to time after every blow, and came handsomely out of the fight, although it lost heavily in flesh and blood, it was by nothing in spirit. The feeling existing in the several regiments is that of mutual confidence in each other; perhaps no body of troops ever possessed this feeling to a greater extent. Whenever a duty is assigned the brigade where hard fighting is expected, there is but one other circumstance required to give the men entire confidence in their strength and ability to accomplish the object desired; and that is for them to know that Battery "B" is on hand to back them. This battery is manned principally by volunteers from the brigade, and commanded by Lieut. DARRIN of the regular artillery, than whom a braver officer is not in the service. If laurels have been won by any of the regiments of the brigade since its organization, they have been won by the united efforts of the others; and we all feel a deep interest and a very peculiarly sensitive in regard to praise or censure bestowed. Under these circumstances your gift, is a most and appropriate reward for any merit we may possess; and, coming as it does through the combined of some of the most distinguished and patriotic citizens of the States from which the several regiments respectively hail, this banner, inscribed with the name which our ever-advancing friends have conferred upon the brigade, and with the names of the several regiments, together with the names of the battles in which we have participated, we look upon it as the highest compliment that could be paid us. I need not undertake to tell you with what love and pride it will be cherished by the brigade, nor with what firm resolve and stern defiance it will be flaunted in the face of the foe; but I will say that our conduct shall be such as never to cause a blush to mantle the cheek of the donors. This day will be remembered with pride by every member of the brigade as long as life shall last, and in future years the day and the gift will be pointed to by our children as a testimonial to the services rendered by their fathers to the country in the hour of its new trial; not only to us, the fragment of the old brigade which you now see before you, but we feel it to be also a testimonial to the gallant deeds and faithful services of our brave comrades who have won honorable graves in the field; and their children also will have an equal interest in the memory of this day and this gift. If it be true—as we trust it is—that the spirits of the departed have cognizance of the affairs of this life, then the balmes of our brigade, the commander of which, whose life-blood moistened the shores of Virginia, Maryland and Pennsylvania, are now witnessing our rise in its bright uniform of the heavenly corps to which they have been transferred, witnessing with approving smiles the ceremonies of this occasion. This mark of your appreciation, Sir, will add new life to the brigade; the sight of this banner will recall proud memories to cheer the drooping spirit in the hour of fatigue, and nerve every man's arm to deal heavier blows in the hour of battle. And now, Sir, while we continue the fight with traitors in arms, whose power is now rapidly crumbling away under the blows of the army and navy, yet, with our fellow-citizens at home, have a duty to perform, if not so dangerous to life and limb—perhaps no less arduous—the struggle with, and final victory over the subtle, invidious and extremely treacherous foe in our rear. For our sakes and for the sake of the memory of the deeds which you have this day, by this time, signified your approbation—for the sake of the memory of the patriots slain—for the sake of our common loved country, the cause of human freedom and the progress of civilization, we admonish you to put down this foe in the North. We can now easily crush the rebellion in the field; if you will crush the secessionists at home. Let not the sophistry and twaddle about respect for the Constitution of these treacherous, conscienceless, self-annointed lecturers mislead the unthinking portion of our people into the sin of disloyalty to the Government and opposition to the highest interests of the nation. Let it not be recorded by the future historians that in the latter part of the Nineteenth century the United States of America, one of the most powerful of the nations, with the best Government ever organized, a model for the world, a country most rich, beautiful and salubrious, the hope and asylum of the oppressed of all nations, in the height of prosperity, while every branch of industry was thriving beyond precedent, and every channel of commerce was flowing with untold wealth, the Government was shocked by a sudden revolt in a certain portion of its territory where the system of negro slavery, a relict of the barbarous ages existed, authorized and sustained by the loyal laws inaugurated by a few unprincipled, unscrupulous politicians, men who had been pampered by the Government until they had become so STRONGLY as to claim as a right all the principal offices of trust in the gift of the people, and who had become so impregnated with aristocratic notions through the influences of their domestic system as to become disgusted with democratic institutions, and had, by insidious arguments, for a long time been poisoning the minds of the people, until excited to madness they rose in armed revolt. In the first place they had fault with the Emancipation Proclamation, and say it is unconstitutional and should be revoked; that the measure was intended to, and would incite servile insurrection; that it would create a feeling of hatred against the North among the slaves. It supposes that the opposition will not discover the weakness of the old arguments used against the Abolitionists, that the slave is as much the property of his master as his horse or cow. Now, I think it would puzzle them battle politicians to show us the law—either constitutional or national—that prohibits the appropriation or destruction of the property of our enemy, if by so appropriating or destroying we cripple him. I am confident no sane man does so, and is doing, as much to cripple the power of the rebels as the appropriation of their slaves. Over eight months have passed since the emancipation order was issued, and we have looked in vain for the servile insurrections prophesied of. As to that sweet love-feast that these prophets told us was to be so rudely and unconstitutionally interrupted, we were never much alarmed about it. We knew their hatred could be no deeper against the North—we know that nineteen-twentieths of the rebels are more rank traitors, and we are satisfied that there are more loyal Union people in the seceded States to-day than on the day the first rebel gun was fired at Fort Sumter, and we further know that should any loyal citizen lose slaves through the operation of this order, he might have the same claim against the Government that he or any other loyal citizen may have, North or South, for the loss of a horse or other property used or destroyed by the orders of the Government. We have implicit confidence in the integrity and ability of the President and our Generals in the field. As I said before, if our patriots at home can assume the station taken in their midst, (for there is where the greatest danger now lies,) we will finish the traitors in the field. And when our work is done—when, from the crystal lakes on the north to the Gulf on the south, from the Atlantic on the east to the Pacific on the west, the Flag of the Union shall wave in triumph over every mile of our domain—when every political leader—those Southern thieves shall have fled from our soil, we will return to our homes, and upon our banners shall be inscribed the wheat States, the cotton States, the gold States, the corn States, the iron and coal States, the lumber States, the granite and marble States, and also the sitting States, (our Southern sisters to the contrary notwithstanding,) the E Pluribus Unum and the Union forever. To the distinguished officers of the army present whose names have become associated with fame, and are household words throughout the land, a return sincere thanks for the approbation expressed and honor conferred by their visit. Again I thank you, sir, and the gentlemen donors for this highly-prized present. May you all live to enjoy the blessings of a reunited and happy country. Under the favor of God, we hope ere long to return to our homes in the Northwest—the land of crystal lakes, pure, running brooks, and beautiful rolling prairies, where the wild rose and honeysuckle bloom in rich profusion—the land where the wild vine and linden intertwine in peaceful and loving embrace. Whence that time shall come, when the patriot can point with pride to a reunited and prosperous nation, saved by her sons from dissolution and anarchial ruin, and can dwell with renewed confidence in the justice and wisdom of God to counteract the machinations of the admirers of the institutions of the dark ages, to stay the growth of liberty and the progress of civilization, we shall be happy to meet you at our homes on the beautiful prairies, and in the shady groves of the Northwest. We remember them all our companions in arms, and all the purest friends of the Iron brigade, will ever be welcome guests on the heartstones of its members.

The flag has been before described in THE TIMES. It is certainly a magnificent gift. Made of heavy blue silk, regulation size, and ornamented with the names of the regiments in the brigade, the name of each principal battle, and in the centre by our country's cost of arms, all worked in with silk chenille and most exquisitely shaded. The staff is surmounted by a beautiful silver spear-head.

The Second Wisconsin regiment, Lieut.-Col. MANSFIELD, being the senior regiment of the brigade, was awarded the honor of escorting the flag to camp.

The large and brilliant assemblage of officers were then invited to the tables where the collation was spread, and it is my duty to say that this repast, though prepared, amid great difficulties, and spread here in a dark Virginia wilderness, was the most replete with luxuries of anything of the kind that has appeared in the army. Not only was it elegant in quality and in variety, but the quantity was astonishing. There was enough for all the invited guests, for every man of the brigade, and to spare. What think you, quiet people at home, of such a feast, within plain sound of the enemy's cannon, and the veterans standing almost "to arms" themselves?

The Iron brigade always does justice to every subject brought to its attention, and it did not fail this time. The substantials over, and then came the "feast of reason." Col. MANSFIELD, of the Twenty-fourth Michigan, opened the ceremony, and was soon followed by Maj.-Gen. NEWTON, Brig.-Gens. BARLOW and RICE, Col. BRAGG, Capt. HALLECK and others. Of the speeches, your space and my time will only permit me to say that they were not less brilliant and pointed than the character of the brigade. Every sentiment teemed with eloquent but fiery determination. Even Copperheads would have been melted.

Several eloquent letters were also sent from Judge EMMONS, of the Land Office, Gov. RANDALL, Gen. HOOKER and others. All in all, the occasion, under the peculiar circumstances, was worthy of the day, the cause and the country.

THE REBEL RAMS TO BE DETAINED.

The London Morning Post, (official) in a short article respecting the two iron-clads building at Liverpool, says:

"There is now, we believe, little doubt that under the terms of the Foreign Enlistment act they are to be detained by Government. The allegation against them is, that they are fitted out for the purpose of carrying on hostilities against the United States. On the other hand, it is contended that they were built by order of a French house for the late Pasha of Egypt, who gave the firm a commission for the construction of a large sum of money in France, and for the construction of two steam rams in England. The money was duly coined and received in Egypt. The vessels were in course of construction when the Pasha died, and his successor repudiated that part of the contract. What the French house intends to do with them is not known. The accusation is that they are destined for war with a friendly Power; they will consequently be detained, and a Court of Law will determine whether, under the terms of the Foreign Enlistment act, the detention is legal, or whether the owners can recover them from the hands of the Government."

NO DOUBT OF THE DESTINATION OF THE VESSELS.

From the London Star, Sept. 9.

We have now French authority for stating that the Liverpool steam-rams are not intended for France. The Constitutionnel reassures the world upon that point. If any assurance was required. The same authority asserts that the rams are for the Pasha of Egypt. We are in a position to give the assertion the most unqualified denial. They are not for the Egyptian Government; and if Earl RUSSELL, in the course of the anxious inquiries he takes credit for making, would adopt the simple course of asking the representatives of those Governments whose names are made a convenience of by the Confederate ship-builders and their friends, he would soon discover that the vessels can have no other than an illegal destination. So easy is the process of discovering whether or not these vessels are commissioned by any Power having a right to employ British ports for the purpose, that we cannot regard Earl RUSSELL's reply to the Emancipation Society and the legal discussion expected on as any other light than mere quibbles, calculated to stimulate sessions of the law, and to protract the wrong doers. The inquiries which would establish the conclusive fact that the vessels have no legitimate pretensions lie within the domain of the Foreign Office. It will not do for his lordship to attempt to escape responsibility by leaving the duty to the Treasury and Home Departments alone. Has the Foreign Office, we ask, taken the trouble to inquire at the various foreign embassies whether these vessels are the property of any State or potentate against whom the Foreign Enlistment Act would not at present apply? It is of the utmost importance to obtain this negative evidence of the illegal ownership, as His Lordship puts forward the necessity of proving not only the equipment of the vessels for purposes of war, but also that the owners intend to use them against some State or community in friendship with Her Majesty.

A ship fitted for purposes of war, if not armed, might be suffered to leave if her destination was a foreign port for purposes of sale. But an armed ship cannot be allowed to leave on any consideration, her armor placing her at once in a different category, demanding firmer treatment on the part of those Governments which desire to deal honorably with neutrals. It stints up the investigation to a point, by which of the foreign Powers has these vessels been ordered? No private person has a right to commission any one to build an armed ship for their use; so that the idea that either Mr. LAIRD or any merchant foreigner desired to run the blockade with these vessels and to sell them in the foreign port is excluded from consideration. Governments alone have the right to deal with arms and armed ships. If Earl Russell, therefore, will be bold enough to send a clerk round the various embassies, he, and any jury to whom he may submit the question, on receiving their answer in the negative, will be shut up to the conclusion that the rams are for the Confederates, or some other illegal purpose. Yet his lordship be still blinded by the quibbles which he himself has raised, for he running him that the builder of the rams built the Alabama, under contract with the same Government—a fact which is patent to the whole world since the publication of the correspondence between the United States Ambassador and his lordship. There has been no judicial investigation regarding the Alabama, but the law officers of the Crown decided that her equipment was a breach of the Foreign Enlistment act, and recommended her to be stopped, while her proceedings since have been too notorious to require to be judicially investigated. Mr. LAIRD, therefore, and any vessels he may build, do not stand in the same position as if no such fact occurred. He has already done illegal work for the same insolent belligerent who continues the usurpation of the British sovereign. Now that he, a suspected person, is again found in suspicious circumstances, the Government will incur a most serious responsibility should he be permitted to complete his disloyal and pernicious designs.

A TIMELY PARALLEL.

The News gives at length the history of the Monarch, and alluding to the conduct of the builders and the Government, it says:

"If the steam-rams now lying in the Mersey are not intended for the Confederates it would be interesting to know for whom they are intended. And if Messrs. LAIRD will only act in the same spirit which actuated Messrs. LEE, of New-York, they will not only enable the Government to execute the law, but will relieve themselves from the just suspicion of endangering the peace of their country for the miserable profit of a few thousand pounds.

COMMENTS ON LORD RUSSELL'S LETTER.

From the London Times, Sept. 8.

Does Lord RUSSELL require evidence that the steam rams are to be navigated and fought by their present owners, or only that they are to be navigated and fought by somebody or other in the province of a friendly Power? Of this discrimination the whole case will practically turn. It cannot be deemed unlikely that these vessels will find their way some day or other to the hands of the Confederates, and be employed against the United States; but it is highly unlikely that their present owners will be engaged in the employment. If the latter condition is requisite to constitute the misdemeanor of the transaction, we may
